ARABS TO NEGOTIATE A WEST BANK STATE

Virtually All Are Now Set to Agree on Nation for Palestinians

By HENRY TANNER

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Dec. 3—Arab negotiators intend to start talks on a Middle East settlement next year with a proposal for a Palestinian state on the West Bank of the Jordan and in the Gaza Strip, territories occupied by Israel since the war of 1967.

According to Arab diplomats, a basic conflict continues to exist between the so-called moderate Arab governments and the Palestinian leadership over the nature of such a state and the guarantees that should be offered to Israel.

Palestinian officials say that the principle of a West Bank state has been accepted now, although reluctantly, by all the major groups in the Palestine Liberation Organization, notably by Al Fatah, the largest guerrilla faction in the movement; by the Marxist Democratic Front; and by the pro-Syrian guerrilla group that carries out Syrian policy.

Libya and Iraq in Tactic Assent... The only holdouts are the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, headed by George Habash, and various splinter groups. This so-called "rejection front" has been weakened by the war in Lebanon and by the presence here of Syrian troops.

Even Libya and Iraq, the two countries most strongly opposed to a negotiated settlement with Israel, have given tacit agreement to the principle of a West Bank state, Palestinian officials say. Thus there is a virtual consensus among the Arabs on this point, they added.

The crucial unresolved question, in their view, is "who will control this state?" It is on this question, the officials added, that even the moderates among the Palestinian leaders remain in disagreement.

U.S. to Give Manila $1 Billion in Aid To Keep Right to Use Military Bases

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—The United States had reached a tentative agreement with the Philippines to give Manila $1 billion in economic and military aid over the next five years in return for continued use of Philippine military bases, State Department officials said tonight.

The unexpected accord, after months of on-again, off-again negotiations, doubles the level of American assistance to the Philippines. The agreement is subject to approval by Congress next year. Because of criticism here of the martial-law policies of President Ferdinand E. Marcos, approval is not guaranteed.

Officials said an announcement of the aid agreement might be made in the next few days, perhaps tomorrow. A final treaty on the bases, however, still must be negotiated. It must deal with the questions of sovereignty and legal responsibility for the numerous bases used by the American air and naval forces.

Agreement on the $1 billion figure surprised many people even within the Ford Administration, officials said, because it was about twice the amount the United States had been offering when negotiations were suspended in September. In fact, many officials believed that rather than try to negotiate further, the Administration would turn the issue over to the Carter administration, as it has other outstanding negotiations. But the Philippines, possibly concerned that the Carter administration might be more adamant because of the civil-liberties situation in their country, apparently decided to try to negotiate as much as possible before the Ford Administration departed.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger negotiated the last stages of the aid agreement with Foreign Minister Carlos Romulo in Washington, at the United Nations, and earlier this week in Mexico City, where both men were attending the inauguration of President José López-Portillo.

The United States was willing to pay the high price for the continued use of the bases, officials said.

High Court Delays Gilmore's Death

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—The Supreme Court indefinitely postponed today the execution of Gary Mark Gilmore to give itself more time to consider his case. Mr. Gilmore was to have died before a firing squad in Utah at sunrise on Monday.

The Court did not announce its decisions, however, on requests that it stay the executions of two convicted murderers from Texas who are scheduled to be executed Dec. 10. They are Robert Excell White and James Livingston.

The justices are believed to have considered these requests today at their regular private Friday conference, along with several dozen other pending requests for high court review of lower court rulings. It is possible that the justices will announce their decisions in the Texas case Monday when they announce their actions on the other cases discussed at conference.

The Court's action today thus added a new degree of uncertainty both to the bizarre Gilmore case and to the growing confusion over various aspects of the law on capital punishment.

Also, the Court leaves in doubt whether the nine-year moratorium on executions in America is about to come to an end. Mr. Gilmore and one of the Texas defendants, Mr. White, have insisted that they be executed in accordance with their court rulings.

Vance Is Selected By Carter to Run State Department

Georgia Banker Named Budget Office Head

By CHARLES MOHR

PLAINS, Ga., Dec. 3—President-elect Jimmy Carter announced today that he had chosen Cyrus R. Vance to be Secretary of State and an old Georgia political ally, Bert Lance, to be director of the Office of Management and Budget.

At a news conference this afternoon, Mr. Carter announced his first selections to his Cabinet-level policy-making team and introduced to a nationwide television audience his nominees for Secretary of State and the important post at O.M.B., saying he believed the nation "can be reassured that the first two choices have been superlative."

His selections came not as a surprise but as a possible pattern for many forthcoming personnel choices. In Mr. Vance he chose an Establishment figure who has had considerable experience in Washington, including service as Deputy Secretary of Defense in the critical period of increasing American involvement in the Vietnam War in the middle 1960's.

In Mr. Lance the President-elect chose a Georgia banker who had supported his candidacy for Governor and who served in his state administration as Commissioner of the State Department.

CARTER WON'T ASK POWER OF CONGRESS FOR PRICE CONTROL

FEARS ANTICIPATORY INCREASE

Wholesale Index Rose in November

—First Appointments Are Made to Cabinet-Level Positions

By EILEEN SHANAHAN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—President-elect Jimmy Carter, openly expressing a fear that businesses were raising prices now because of a threat of price and wage controls under his administration, announced today that he would not ask Congress for the authority to impose such controls.

The statement was made by Mr. Carter at a nationally televised news conference in which he also announced the names of the first two Cabinet-rank aides he had selected: Cyrus R. Vance to be Secretary of State and Thomas Bertram Lance to be director of the Office of Management and Budget.

Mr. Carter's statement on wage and price controls represented a 180-degree turn from the position he had taken throughout the Presidential campaign during which he always said that he hoped never actually to impose wage and price controls but that he needed the authority to do so if it became necessary.

Recommended by Visitors... It was learned that the disavowal of his intention to ask Congress for standing wage and price control authority had been recommended to Mr. Carter unanimously by the 16 economists and businessmen with whom he met at Plains, Ga., on Wednesday.

According to one of those who was present, all of the participants in the meeting "felt there was no point in being the specter of price controls around to arouse people to action that would only hurt" Mr. Carter's attempts to move the economy out of the recession with increasing inflation.

Their recommendation, and Mr. Carter's statement, plainly were triggered by the adoption of a price increase of 6 to 8 percent on basic sheet steel and by other recent announcements of price increases by the aluminum and synthetic textile industries.

Latest Price Index Released... Mr. Carter avoided any denunciation of the companies announcing the price increases, however.

The President-elect's renegeance on controls came only a few hours after the release, by the Labor Department, of the regular monthly Wholesale Price Index which showed a substantial rise in November for the third straight month.

The Labor Department also reported today that unemployment in November had risen to 8.1 percent, breaking out of the range of 7.8 to 7.9 percent when it had remained for the preceding four months.

The unemployment figures, coupled with the price index rise, were seen as a sign of economic deterioration.

JOBLESS RATE IS 8.1% HIGHEST OF THE YEAR

Layoffs of Adult Men a Key Factor in November Unemployment Rise

By EDWARD COWAN

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—The national unemployment rate rose from 7.9 percent to 8.1 percent in November, its highest level this year, despite an apparent strong gain in the number of persons with jobs, the Labor Department reported today.

The rise in unemployment was particularly significant because the statistics indicated that it resulted from layoffs of adult men, a sign of economic deterioration.

President-elect Jimmy Carter said the report showed that the economy would probably need additional stimulus from the Government in early 1977, but that he would make no definite decision on that matter, or on what type of stimulus would be best, until the new year.

The key figures in the monthly report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, all adjusted to smooth out seasonal swings, were the following:

Unemployment: a new high of 88,130,000, up 357,000 from October.

Unemployment: 7,769,000, up 200,000 from October.

Unemployment rate: 8.1 percent, up from 7.9 percent. In other words, of the total civilian labor force of 95,899,000.

Overtures of Reassurance

Appointments Indicate Carter Intends to Blend Officials of Experience With Able Newcomers

By HEDRICK SMITH

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—With his first two Cabinet-level appointments, President-elect Jimmy Carter has offered reassurance to the worlds of business and diplomacy and signaled to politicians that he will dominate policy-making in the crucial areas of foreign affairs and the budget. He has underscored the urgency he feels to move quickly in both fields by announcing ahead of all other Cabinet appointments his choice of Cyrus R. Vance as Secretary of State and Bert Lance as director of the Office of Management and Budget.

And he has quite deliberately struck a contrast with the Nixon and Ford Administrations and the highly personalized, shuttle diplomacy of Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger with the selection of a self-effacing negotiator and crisis manager like Mr. Vance to take charge of the State Department. In so doing, he has laid the groundwork for setting foreign policy objectives himself from the White House.

But reassuring allies and adversaries was clearly in his mind. Even before the appointments were announced, one of Mr. Carter's long-time aides remarked privately that Mr. Vance was a figure of solidity and stature, widely respected in this country and abroad, and that Mr. Vance, while less well known nationally, had won a very favorable reputation among political and business circles.

English Relics Falling Victim To Modern Ills

By FRED FERRETTI

There is, it appears, no end to Britain's travails this year. First it was the extended drought, then the plummeting pound. Now, financial hard times and the erosion brought on by years of tourism have combined to force the British to close the baths at Bath and to severely restrict access to Stonehenge.

The Government ordered the hot mineral springs baths—discovered by Roman soldiers 1,900 years ago—closed yesterday because the town council of Bath could not afford to keep them open after Britain's National Health Service withdrew its support for patients who bathed there and drank the waters.

Health Service patients accounted for 95 percent of the estimated 40,000 patients who used the baths each year. Even as the closing was ordered, it was disclosed by The Times of London that public access to Stonehenge, the prehistoric monument on Salisbury Plain, was about to be restricted. Visitors will be kept behind a picket and rope fence, behind a bank and ditch, 100 feet from the center of the circle of stones.

China's Hesitant Hierarchy

End of Parley Without Resolving of Key Issues Hints at Caution or Differences Among Leaders

By FOX BUTTERFIELD
Special to The New York Times

HONG KONG, Dec. 3—The close yesterday of the meeting of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress without any public action on several key unresolved questions seems to indicate that Peking's new leaders are not yet prepared to deal with some of the most difficult problems facing them. The three-day session of the committee of the congress, China's nominal legislature, did not name a new prime minister to replace the current one, Hua Kuo-feng, who was elevated to Communist Party Chairman in October. Nor did it appoint a new chairman of the congress itself, a position left vacant by the death of Marshal Chu Teh in July. It also apparently did not hear any report on the economy or the delayed fifth five-year plan, as might be expected at a Standing Committee session.

Analysts here are uncertain whether the lack of action indicates that Mr. Hua is being deliberately cautious in forming his new government, or whether it reflects differences of opinion between him and his associates among the old party bureaucrats and army commanders. Whatever the case, the main purpose of the session seems to have been a limited one—to demonstrate to China's 850 million people that the new leadership is moving ahead with unity and confidence. There were several signs that Mr. Hua did not intend the session to pass on major appointments or policy. For one thing, it was not preceded by a publicly announced meeting of the party's Central Committee, which would normally occur, since it is the party that really makes key decisions.

Key People Not Called In
Nor did Peking's new leaders even call in some senior provincial members of the congress Standing Committee, who should have attended if the session was to produce major decisions. These included two members of the Politburo, Wei Kuo-ching, the first party secretary of Kwangtung, and Sairudin, the first secretary of the Sinkiang Autonomous Region. The session did, however, announce three actions. It dismissed Foreign Minister Chiao Chiao-an, a 68-year-old diplomat who has been accused of "opportunism" in his relations with Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow, and three other disgraced Politburo members. He was replaced by Huang Hua, another experienced diplomat who until this week served as representative at the United Nations. And the session appointed the late Prime Minister Chou En-lai's widow, Teng Yins-chao, as a deputy chairman of the congress. Miss Chao, a 73-year-old revolutionary who is immensely popular, like her late husband, seemed to bestow his stamp of approval on Mr. Hua's leadership.

"Great Proletarian Mettle"
Addressing yesterday's closing meeting, she said, "Chairman Hua possesses great proletarian mettle and foresight and wisdom, is prompt and resolute in making decisions and handles matters appropriately."

Since the arrest two months ago of the four Politburo members, who are now charged with being sham leftists, Chou En-lai has been increasingly extolled in the press and is now routinely referred to as "the respected and beloved" Prime Minister Chou.

There is also mounting evidence that Mr. Hua may have been carefully groomed by Chou as his ultimate successor. It is now known, for example, that when Mr. Hua was first promoted and brought to Peking from Hunan Province in 1971 he served directly under Chou as head of the general office of the State Council.

Analysts expect his widow, Miss Teng, as deputy chairman, will now play an active role in meeting foreign visitors, thus further increasing the public association between Chou and Mr. Hua.

Further Announcements Withheld
According to Hsinhua, the Chinese press agency, those who met also decided on "other appointments and removals," but it did not disclose what these were.

They might have included the dismissal of Chang Chun-chiao, the senior Deputy Prime Minister, who was one of the four disgraced Politburo members, as well as the ouster of several Cabinet ministers who are believed to be in trouble.

In addition to Mr. Chiao, the Foreign Minister, these are the Minister of Culture, Yu Hui-yang, a former musician close to Miss Chiang, the Minister of Public Health, Liu Hsing-ping, the mother of an official at Peking University who has been taken before mass-criticism meetings over the last few days, and the Minister of Physical Culture, Chuang Tse-tung. Mr. Chuang is a former world champion ping-pong player. Wall posters attacking Mr. Chuang appeared today outside his ministry.

Chiao Action Puzzles Analysts
Analysts here are still puzzled over Mr. Chiao's removal having been made public while the other presumed changes were not. One factor might be that as Foreign Minister Mr. Chiao was an international figure and China could not afford to be without someone in that post. Another explanation might be that Mr.

Poster displayed in Peking shows Chiang Ching, Mao Tse-tung's widow, wearing Western dress after hanging up her Mao jacket; and cap, Western and Soviet books are behind her. A picture of herself and the other members of the "antiparty gang" is on the wall. She reads a book about Empress Wu Tse-tien, a 7th century ruler well known for her promiscuity.

Chiao is not thought to be as deeply involved in the alleged crimes of the four Politburo members as some of the others. He therefore was dismissed quickly. The others would most likely be forced to submit to lengthy interrogation and criticism sessions in private before being publicly disgraced.

and his associates will hold a Central Committee meeting or party congress to finally realign the large number of senior party, army and Government officials that need to be changed, including the prime minister. Such meetings are not held until all decisions are carefully worked out beforehand and they require time to organize.

bases because they are viewed by the State and Defense Departments as crucial to the American presence in the Western Pacific. The most important facilities are Clark Air Base and the Subic Bay Naval Base. They are the largest American facilities between the Asian mainland and Hawaii and, officials said, their loss would cause repercussions in Japan and throughout Asia. The bases have been in American control ever since Philippine independence in 1946 when the United States, as the departing colonial power, was able to negotiate a favorable long-term accord. Since then, the bases agreements have been modified, but following the fall of Indochina to the Communists last year, Mr. Marcos made it clear that he wanted a more advantageous agreement. He was also inspired, officials said, by a $1.2 billion, five-year accord the United States signed with Spain, and a $1 billion, four-year accord signed with Turkey. Of the $1 billion in aid, half will be in military grants and credits and half in economic assistance. Aid has been running about $100 million a year, with about $35 million in military and the rest in economic aid, including low-cost food for peace.

Giscard to Seek Summit Talks Among Industrialized Nations

PISA, Italy, Dec. 3 (UPI)—President Valéry Giscard d'Estaing of France says that he will propose a new meeting of the leaders of Western industrialized nations and Japan in the first half of next year. His announcement came at the end of a day of talks with Italian officials, including President Giovanni Leone and Prime Minister Giulio Andreotti, at the presidential hunting lodge near Pisa. He returned to Paris. Mr. Giscard d'Estaing told reporters: "I am convinced that these [industrialized] nations should jointly study the economic-monetary situation in the first six months of 1977 following major changes in the second half of this year." The President wants the talks to be preceded by a meeting of the heads of the nine European Community member nations. Several of the nine were not invited to previous recent summit talks and were clearly irritated at not being consulted beforehand.

Bonn to Pay Millions to East for Prisoner Release

By ELLEN LENTZ
Special to The New York Times
WEST BERLIN, Dec. 3—West Germany has reportedly agreed to pay millions of dollars to East Germany to obtain freedom for several hundred political prisoners by Christmas.
According to a high West German source, the agreement, which is similar to a number of others over the last 15 years, is being rushed into effect to give East Germans much-needed Western cash to buy consumer goods and special food items. The aim, the informant said, is to help the East German Government placate disaffected citizens and prevent the current wave of public restiveness from getting out of hand.
"For humanitarian reasons, we must do all we can for the people over there," the West German said.
The informant said that East Germany, besides pledging to set several hundred prisoners free, had given assurances that it would undertake no further repressive action against dissidents.

He said that the situation spoke for itself and allowed everyone "to draw his own conclusions."
In another gesture of good will, the West Berlin administration acted swiftly to return to his parents in East Berlin a 15-year-old boy who scaled the wall to flee to the West last week.
The new arrangement to free prisoners has not been made public, in accordance with an official policy to keep details of such dealings secret. But the West German Ministry for Intra-German Affairs has let it be known that in each of the last two years $42 million was spent for prisoner releases. This time the total amount was said to be somewhat higher.
Informants said the minimum price for the release of a prisoner had been set at $20,000—above last year's figure—with higher sums demanded for prisoners with special training, such as doctors or scientists.
In the last 15 years a total of about $250 million has been passed to the East, Germans in return for the release of prisoners to West Germany. About 1,500 people were freed each year, most of them had been jailed for escape attempts or other protest activities.
Westerners held in East Germany are also expected to be released. Most of them were arrested as they helped Germans flee the country.
The funds are not passed on to East Germans through official government channels but are handed over to churches, the Red Cross or other humanitarian organizations in the form of certified consumer goods purchased in West.
As in the years before, a pair of lawyers from East and West, Wolfgang Vogel of East Berlin and Jürgen Stange of West Berlin, are charged with making the arrangements. They draw up the lists, settle on the price, and Mr. Vogel escorts the prisoners in busloads to a crossing point at Hersehausen near Eisenach.

Lisbon Panel Accuses Leftists in Military of Torture

By MARVINE HOWE
Special to The New York Times
LISBON, Dec. 3—A presidential commission accused former leftist military officials today of having committed systematic torture and arbitrary acts as well as generally cruel treatment of prisoners.
The commission's report, which was made public in an extensive issue of the Commission of Inquiry Into Violence Against Prisoners Under Military Jurisdiction. The commission set up to investigate allegations of systematic torture and arbitrary acts by the military authorities in the 18 months between the overthrow of the dictatorship on April 25, 1974 and the abortive leftist rising of Nov. 25, 1975.
President Antonio Ramalho Eanes declared that the commission's investigation "without doubt" that a large number of military men as well as some civilians had performed acts that "constituted a affront to human rights."

the Communist Party and the radical Popular Democratic Union.
These groups have already been denounced for having participated in last year's unsuccessful revolt. But it was the first time that such detailed charges of violence were made against them officially.
Municipal Elections Near
The release of the report at this time appeared to be aimed at undermining the extreme leftists, particularly the Communists, who have been waging a strong campaign for the municipal elections on Dec. 12. The commission is said to have first presented the report to the President on Aug. 13.
In its conclusions the commission listed the following principal abuses:
"Hundreds of arbitrary arrests, some on anonymous denunciation or at the request of political and trade-union organizations, in most cases without arrest warrants."
"Lengthy detentions without charges, with one person held for 17 months 'for reasons of state' and then released without explanation."
"Four cases of 'systematic torture' of prisoners in the Lisbon artillery regiment and occasional cases of torture in the military police regiment."
"Many cases of mistreatment of prisoners, specifically beatings."
"Systematic cruelty toward prisoners with the aim of humiliating them by making them crawl on the ground or kiss military insignias on the sidewalk and by housing them with cold water."
"Psychological torture, including insults, intimidation and threats to prisoners and their families."
"Deficiencies in medical assistance, resulting in the death of two prisoners and the worsening of the condition of others."
"Inadequate prison installations, particularly in the military police regiment, where 70 prisoners were held in a cell large enough for eight."
One of the cases related in the report is that of a former marine, Jose Jaime Coelho da Silva, who was kidnapped on May 15 of last year by members of the Lisbon artillery regiment on accusations of involvement in a planned coup.
He said that he had been taken to a house near Cintra and tortured for 15 hours, being subjected to beatings on his head, infrared rays in his eyes, violent blows and three hours of having to stand in a fixed position. He was taken to the general hospital under a false name and listed as having suffered a traffic accident. Later he was held three months incommunicado in the military prison of Cascais.
The commission recommends that standards of military justice be rapidly established to prevent a recurrence of the incidents described in the report.
Asks Quick Trials of Rightists
It also calls for trials pending in military courts to be held urgently, particularly of those connected with the former dictatorship's political police, known as PIDE.
Meanwhile, after more than two and a half years, the first PIDE officer was sentenced yesterday to the loss of his political rights for five years and set free.
The military court gave the PIDE brigade chief, Alberto Raul de Carvalho, a light sentence because he had "collaborated with" the Portuguese armed forces in Mozambique after the 1974 revolution.
People outside the courthouse were shocked at the lightness of the sentence, shouting "Bandit" and "Assassin" as Mr. Carvalho left the building under heavy guard.

El Al Joining Charter Run to U.S.

By WILLIAM E. FARRELL
Special to The New York Times
JERUSALEM, Dec. 3—El Al, the Israeli national airline, will begin low-budget charter flights—its first—from Boston to Jerusalem next September.
A spokesman confirmed that El Al, which has resisted charter flights, had signed an agreement with an organization called International Weekends to run twice-weekly charters using Boeing 707 jets. The cost of package tours was estimated by nonairline sources at $500 a week per passenger, including accommodations. The flights, the first charters to Israel from the East Coast, will land in Jerusalem rather than at the major airport, Ben-Gurion, which is near Tel Aviv.
First From the West Coast
The spokesman said that the airline still opposed charter flights, preferring group travel, but that it had agreed to the arrangement because it did not want to be left out. Charter flights already available originate in Scandinavia, Britain and West Germany, with many going to the southern port city of Eilat, which the Israeli Government has been developing as a tourist center.
Last month an inaugural flight chartered from the West Coast landed here after months of dispute over charter tourism on the ground that it did little for the economy because it attracted less affluent customers. The charter, which is to be carried by World Airways, will arrive every two weeks with American visitors at a cost, under current winter rates, of $900 per person for two weeks, not including meals.
The Israeli Minister of Tourism, Moshe Kol, said 95,000 tourists were expected next year on charter flights originating in the United States, Scandinavia, West Germany and Britain—a threefold increase over 1975.
He added that because the Government had modified its policy, it was possible to attract vacationers "for whom the price of a holiday trip is the deciding factor when deciding on a visit to Israel." He also said that charter flights would aid the Government's effort to increase winter tourism, keeping hotel occupancy as high as possible.
According to Mr. Kol's office, the forecast for 1976 puts the number of tourists at over 700,000.

Israel Asks U.S. to Approve Eventual Sale of 250 F-16's

Special to The New York Times
WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—Israel has asked the United States to approve formally the sale of 250 F-16 fighter planes in coming years, Administration officials said.
The Ford Administration approved in principle last year the sale to Israel of the newly developed American fighter, which is being sold to Western Europe and to Iran.
But the Israeli request for 250 planes, made last week, was the first definite number submitted by Israel. It is now under study in the Pentagon and State Department, and no recommendations are expected for some time.
A major problem has been the terms of sale. The Israelis want an agreement to produce the body frames of the planes to reduce expenditures of foreign currency.

Occupation of Land by Peasants Is Said to Have Ended in Mexico

By ALAN RIDING
 Special to The New York Times

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 3—Some 3,500 landless peasants, who brought agricultural work to a standstill yesterday by occupying or threatening to occupy 100,000 acres of private farmland in the northwest Mexican state of Sinaloa, were persuaded to withdraw today, according to representatives of the landowners.

In a telephone interview, Victor Barrante, manager of the Small Farmers Federation of Sinaloa, said that state officials were negotiating with peasant leaders and that farming in much of the region should resume this weekend.

To the north, in the state of Sonora, where former President Luis Echeverria Alvarez expropriated 100,000 acres of private land two weeks ago, about 1,100 peasants ended their 10-day occupation of 13 large farms last night.

Peasants Vow to Continue Campaign

But, just two days into the new Government of President José López Portillo, the situation in the Mexican countryside remains tense and confused, reflecting the new militancy of landless peasants who felt encouraged by Mr. Echeverria's controversial land expropriation almost on the eve of leaving office.

The new Minister of Agrarian Reform, Jorge Rojo Lugo, has declared that the new Government will tolerate neither illegal land invasions nor private estates larger than the law permits.

According to the principal peasant organizations, the largest concentration of illegally-large farms is in Sonora and Sinaloa and that the campaign for their expropriation and distribution to landless peasants will continue.

Yesterday's action by peasants to Sinaloa's valleys of Carrizo and El Fuerte involved invading some holdings and setting up improvised camps beside other disputed property. The presence of the peasants, some of whom were believed to be armed, forced farmers to suspend work in the fields.

In the main, these peasants were dissatisfied with an agreement worked out last week by which private farmers donated 22,000 acres of irrigated land throughout Sinaloa to landless peasants. Another 64,000 acres in the state are being claimed by the peasants, but are subject to a decision of the courts expected next week.

In Sinaloa, Mr. Barrante said that not all occupation groups were expected to withdraw immediately, but he was confident that at least 80 percent of the invaders would respond to orders from their leaders.

Gunman Kills a Traffic Warden At School in Town Near Belfast

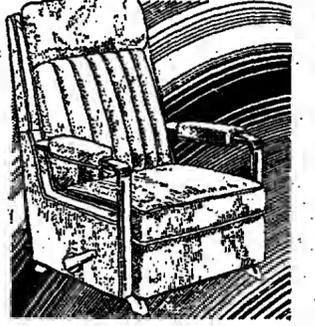

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Dec. 3 (AP)—A young gunman killed a traffic warden today at a school crossing in Danganoo, 40 miles west of Belfast, the police reported.

The assassin, believed to be a member of the outlawed Irish Republican Army's Provisional wing, ran up to the warden, fired three pistol shots into his back, and fled in a waiting auto, police said.

The 49-year-old victim, who was not immediately identified, was also a police reservist.

Twenty-one policemen have been slain this year in the province, where the mainly Catholic I.R.A. is trying to force the British out of the Protestant-dominated province.

English Relics Falling Victim To the Ills of Modern Society

sponsibility for national conservation, said yesterday. "We have reached the moment of decision for Stonehenge. Either we protect it, or we continue to allow people to trample over the site and leave posterity to look after itself. "I am not prepared to consider the latter alternative," Baroness Birk said.

Enormous Number of Visitors
The restriction has been made necessary, according to conservation officials, because of the enormous number of people who now visit Stonehenge and who have been wearing away and chipping away at the prehistoric stones.

Stonehenge is Britain's second most popular tourist attraction after the Tower of London. Last year it was visited by an estimated 670,000 people, who, according to the conservationists, have trampled the site to mud and have eroded the site to such an extent that a grit and gravel surface put down a year ago has been obliterated.

The hlinestones that form part of the mysterious monument were hauled nearly 200 miles to Salisbury Plain from mountains in Pembrolshire about 35 centuries ago. They are soft and show signs of wear.

Some of the incised carvings of bronze axe blades and other symbols have been rubbed away by careless feet and curious fingers, by souvenir seekers who have dug into the stone and chipped pieces off.

In addition, the heavy tourist traffic to Stonehenge has necessitated construction of a road that intrudes upon the aesthetics of the site.

Surrounding Burial Culture
The neolithic earthwork that preceded Stonehenge, and other related barrows and monuments of the surrounding Wessex burial culture, are separated from the larger monument by this road. Ideally, it is felt that the entire monument should be viewed as an historic whole.

So the Government will restrict tourist intrusion upon the monument. It will create a more sophisticated road network, leading to parking areas that do not intrude upon the Stonehenge site. It will install audio-visual displays explaining the convoluted archeology and history of Stonehenge. And it will insure that visitors will approach the monument via different paths and view it from a suitable distance—from behind the picket fence.

Bath's problem is not as complex. It is being closed simply because there is not enough money to keep it open.

The first baths at Bath were built by Roman soldiers of the 20th Legion to hold the hot springs waters they found in a settlement that they named Aquae.

The New York Times/Dec. 4, 1976

Salis, after Sul, a local deity identified with the goddess of health and cleanliness.

When the Romans left, the Britons renamed the springs Bath and by the 18th century had built the town around them. It was a town that catered to fashionable Englishmen, with dandies flocking there to bathe, dance, gamble and recover from hangovers by drinking the metallic-tasting waters, which are said to contain 38 different minerals. Only lately has it been determined that one of these minerals is a radioactive gas called Radon.

In the 18th century a Hot Springs Treatment Center was built and hundreds of thousands of Britons were treated there. Rheumatisms came to "take the baths," either immersing themselves in the waters or lounging in the ornate "Pump Room" listening to the orchestra and sipping the mineral water pumped up from the springs.

Since the end of World War II, the National Health Service has run the Hot Springs Treatment Center in conjunction with the Bath City Council. The original Roman baths nearby have been open for visiting but not for bathing.

The center, however, has proven too expensive to maintain. According to Social Services Secretary David Ennals, who rejected appeals to keep the center open, "Although the treatment center is maybe a national asset from an historical point of view, my department could not justify either lessening the center or acquiring it, since there is no clinical evidence that hydrotherapy using spa water has greater therapeutic merit than hydrotherapy using tap water."

And so a new hospital on the outskirts of Bath—with a great deal of tap water in its pool—will do just nicely, and be cheaper, than the baths at Bath, Mr. Ennals said.

But Bath has not given up. Although the baths have been losing $165,000 a year the town wants to keep them. A Bath Spa Trust has been formed and is appealing for donations of $411,000 to renovate the center and the baths and open them as a private spa.

British Laborites Suffer New By-election Defeat, Reducing Majority to One

CASTRO NAMED PRESIDENT OF CUBAN STATE COUNCIL

CAMBRIDGE, England, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Britain's opposition Conservative Party won a by-election here today, reducing the Labor Government's effective majority in the House of Commons to one.

Conservative Robert Rhodes James was elected in a 10 percent swing to the opposition. Last month, Labor lost two of three by-elections—defeats that were attributed to disenchantment with the party's left-wing policies and its failure to cure Britain's economic ills.

The Cambridge seat was previously held by a Conservative. In the 1974 general election the Conservative candidate was elected with a majority of 2,773 votes. Mr. James's majority today was 9,625 votes.

But the move to the right was well below the average 16 percent swing in the November by-elections.

The Labor candidate, Martin Smith, aged 25, finished second and the Liberal Party came third.

The combined opposition to the Labor Party's 316 votes in the House of Commons now rises to 315, providing further problems for the party's floor managers, who on occasion have had to call in traveling and sick members to make up the majority.

Former Stanford Professor

But the opposition groups rarely combine and it is expected that the Government will survive with ease all but the most crucial votes.

Mr. James is a former professor at Stanford University in the United States. He returned to fight the election after three years as executive assistant to Secretary General Kurt Waldheim at the United Nations because of what he described as "a mounting sense of anger and humiliation about what was going on in one's country."

MIAMI, Dec. 3 (AP)—Fidel Castro was named president of Cuba's Council of State today, according to a Havana broadcast. It was not known whether he would retain the title of Prime Minister he has held since taking power Jan. 1, 1959, after a bloody revolution.

The broadcast, monitored in Miami, did not use that term in identifying him. It said Mr. Castro would be the "supreme power" of the nation.

The announcement came during the celebration of the 20th anniversary of the revolution. The newly elected National Assembly, comprising 481 deputies, representing the 14 Cuban provinces, held its inaugural session yesterday.

Mr. Castro has said that the National Assembly would end the revolutionary process and would institute the Cuban socialist state.

He said in a speech to the assembly yesterday that some third-world oil-producing countries were using their petroleum exports to enrich or arm themselves when they could be doing more for other developing nations.

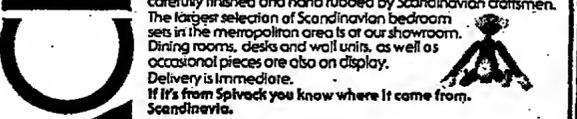

Fiat Says Relations With Israel Won't Be Changed by Libyan Role

TEL AVIV, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Italy's Fiat car company has assured Israel that Libya's purchase of 10 percent of the company will not affect Fiat's relations with Israel, the newspaper Maariv reported today.

The paper said Giovanni Agnelli, chairman of the company, yesterday called on the Israeli Ambassador in Rome, Yisrael Sasson, to give him this assurance. Fiat's are popular cars in Israel. Defense sources said they are also purchased for use by officers but not for other military purposes.

Police in South Africa Conduct Sweep of Blacks

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 3 (AP)—The police arrested 120 people today in sweeps through the Guguletu and Nyanga black townships outside Cape Town, bringing to nearly 300 the number jailed after two nights of riots and arson.

About 600 riot policemen, detectives and uniformed officers continued what a spokesman called a "cleanup" to flush out leaders of the disturbances, in which the police killed two men.

The segregated townships were reported quiet.

Elsewhere in Cape Province, gasoline bombs were thrown into the office of a bus company and two explosions wrecked an office building and shop in a suburb for coloreds, as persons of mixed race in South Africa are called.

European Agree on Steps To Clean Polluted Rhine

BONN, Dec. 3 (AP)—The European Economic Community and countries bordering the Rhine signed three treaties today in a first step to clean up the waters of the busy West European river.

The West German Associations for Water Economy and Supply called the treaties "insufficient and not leading to the hope that the Rhine will get any cleaner."

The first treaty aims to rid the river of chlorides from the French Government's potash mines in Alsace. The main purpose of a second treaty is to keep chemical wastes flowing into the river to a minimum. It calls for coordinated legislation and specifications. A third provides for the E.E.C. to join the International Commission for the Protection of the Rhine.

Italy's Major Parties Back Revising of Vatican Ties

ROME, Dec. 3 (AP)—All major parties in the Italian Parliament today agreed to the Christian Democratic Government's proposals to eliminate Roman Catholicism as the state religion, make religious education voluntary and allow de-frocked priests to hold state posts.

The vote of 412 to 31 came on a motion by the Christian Democrats to continue negotiating with the Vatican on revising the 1929 concordat signed by Mussolini and the church.

The Communists, Socialists, Social Democrats and Republicans said more radical revisions might be required, but agreed to use the Government proposals as a starting point for revising the compact.

Members of the neo-Fascist Italian Social Movement voted against, saying there were internal contradictions in the Government proposals. Three other small parties, the leftist Radicals and Democratic Proletarians and the conservative Liberals insisted the concordat should be abolished.

U.N. Aide Chides Thailand For Driving Out Refugees

Special to The New York Times

GENEVA, Dec. 3—The United Nations high commissioner for refugees rebuked the Thai Government today for having forcibly returned 26 Cambodians to the homeland they had fled to escape Communist rule. According to one report the refugees were immediately executed.

A "very stiff" note of protest from the high commissioner, Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, was delivered to the Thai diplomatic mission here, a refugee source said. The high commissioner recalled in the note that Thailand had subscribed in a joint communique with his office to the principle, enshrined in the 1975 United Nations declaration on territorial asylum that anyone seeking refuge would not be forcibly returned to the country he had fled.

Thai authorities said at the time that the refugees had been expelled because they were spies and a threat to national security.

THIS SUIT AT FINE STORES NATIONWIDE $260 AT THE NEW YORK MANUFACTURER $149

Less than one year ago, Saint Laurie, a fine men's clothing manufacturer for 63 years, introduced a unique selling concept in New York.

What started as a gratifying response, has built into an ever growing legion of extraordinarily dressed, true believers.

The concept is simple: Saint Laurie sells their exquisitely tailored classic American and European cut suits to the most expensive stores throughout the country.

They continue to sell to stores in New York, but not under the Saint Laurie label, and offer their vast collection (over 25,000 suits) direct to the consumer.

Nothing like Saint Laurie exists in New York. To our knowledge, anywhere.

The enormous selection, impeccable tailoring, costliest fabrics with the prices at the factory ranging from $115 to $210, turns the most critical shopper into a delighted customer.

If smashing suits are important to your business or personal life and you've been spending $275 to $300 for them at better stores, come to Saint Laurie and see what feeling and looking good is all about.

Court Papers Confirm Apparent Effort to Bribe Jurors in Mandel Trial

By BEN A. FRANKLIN
Special to The New York Times

BALTIMORE, Dec. 3—Two apparent attempts to prevent a guilty verdict by trying to bribe one or more jurors in the political corruption trial of Gov. Martin Mandel of Maryland and four of his friends and business associates were confirmed today by the partial release of sealed court papers. Two men have been arrested; one of them was later released.

Barney D. Skolnik, the Assistant United States Attorney who is the chief prosecutor in the Mandel case, told newsmen today: "The investigation to date has disclosed no evidence that any of the five men now on trial was involved in either of the two attempted obstructions of justice."

Officials declined to comment on the possible motives of any other persons in seeking to influence the jury.

Unusual security continued to surround both the Mandel jury and the Federal investigation of the jury-tampering incidents. Mr. Skolnik said that further arrests were "possible."

The court documents were placed on public file in the clerk's office at the United States District Court here without the detailed supporting affidavits of Federal investigators. They confirmed in sketchy form that one man, a 67-year-old Baltimore furniture salesman, was under arrest and being held under high bail on charges of offering $10,000 to a Mandel trial juror to guarantee a verdict of not guilty. The juror has been excused and replaced by an alternate.

The unanimous ballot of 12 voting jurors is required to obtain a guilty verdict. The Mandel jury is still weeks or months away from beginning its deliberations, but published reports of the jury-fixing attempts have already led to demands by the defendants' lawyers for a mistrial.

Until Wednesday night, when Judge

Pratt abruptly ordered United States marshals to pick up the jurors at their homes and sequester them at the Lord Baltimore Hotel here, they had been free to go home each night since the trial began on Sept. 8.

The suspect, who is being held under $400,000 bail in the Harford County jail at Bel Air, just outside Baltimore, was identified as Walter Weikers, a German-born salesman for a cut-rate furniture chain. Details of his arrest on Tuesday remain sealed under orders of the judge because the investigation of the episode is still continuing, according to a Federal prosecutor.

Mr. Weikers, a relative by marriage of one of the excused jurors, Oscar Slesin, is reportedly accused of approaching Mr. Slesin with a jury-fixing offer during the Thanksgiving week-end. In the court papers, Mr. Weikers is charged with obstructing justice.

Reportedly, Mr. Slesin, a 56-year-old limousine chauffeur from Bethesda, Md., just outside Washington, reported the alleged bribe offer to Judge Pratt on Monday.

Mr. Slesin was then reportedly equipped by Federal agents with a concealed recording device and met the suspect on Tuesday. The arrest was made at the scene.

Broadcast Reports of Arrest

The first broadcast reports of the incident occurred Wednesday afternoon. Judge Pratt, then sought to secure the jurors from knowledge of the episode and thus avoid a mistrial.

Robert Fradkin, Mr. Weikers's employer since 1969 at Fradkin Brothers Furniture Village, said that Mr. Weikers was absent from work this week, "because he said he was flying to Israel to see his brother, who is sick." The suspect was scheduled to have a hearing on a motion for a reduction of his bail at 5 P.M. Monday.

The court papers made public today also confirmed, again without details, a separate apparent jury-tampering incident.

A man identified in the court documents as Charles E. Neiswender, alias Lee Anderson, of Cinnaminson, N.J., was arrested on Nov. 5, reportedly after telephoning Mr. Mandel's lawyer here, Arnold M. Weimer, with an offer to guarantee that the Governor would not be convicted.

Court records also without explanation, that the charge of obstructing justice against Mr. Neiswender was dismissed before Judge Pratt in a closed hearing in his chambers on Nov. 15, after the accused had been held in jail here for 10 days under bond of $1 million.

The chief prosecutor would not comment directly today on courthouse speculation that a case against Mr. Neiswender had been dropped, for the time being, because the Government had wished to avoid the publicity that it now must deal with as jury-tampering.

If Mr. Neiswender might still be "subject to further action," Mr. Skolnik said that the answer was "absolutely."

Mr. Neiswender, whose phone number in New Jersey is unlisted, could not be reached for comment. His lawyer here, J. Frederick Motz, said he would have to further action," Mr. Skolnik said, "Absolutely."

Toledo Schools Close Early For Lack of Money

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 3 (AP)—Toledo public schools closed for the year today for lack of money, sending 56,000 children home on early vacation until Jan. 3.

For the third time in a year, voters refused in November to approve a tax increase to pay the school system's bills, and that meant 13 extra days for the regular winter holidays.

"Thirteen days is peanuts," said Dr. Robert Jackson, president of the city board of education. "But it is just a hanger of things to come."

Classes will be made up by eliminating the spring vacation in April and by postponing the final day of school to June 24, 10 days later than planned.

School administrators acknowledged that closing the schools now would mean more problems in 1977 if additional money was not found. They already estimate a deficit of $8 million to $10 million for next year, a situation they say would force the schools to close in October, a month after they open.

Martin W. Fisher, Ohio's superintendent of public instruction, approved the early closing in Toledo as well as in six other districts. About 70,000 students in Ohio are out of school now because their districts ran out of money.

Voters in Toledo, in northwestern Ohio with a population of 383,000, rejected a 2.7-mill tax increase on the Nov. 2 ballot. In June 1975 and November 1975, voters rejected proposed tax increases of 7.5 mills. The current school tax is 29.5 mills. A mill is one-tenth of one cent, and 29.5 mills equals $29.50 in tax per $1,000 of assessed value of property.

ACCORD IS ANNOUNCED IN PARCEL WALKOUT

But 10-Week Strike Won't End Until Agreement Is Ratified by 18,000 in 15 Northeastern States

By LEE DENBART

A tentative settlement in the 74-day strike against United Parcel Service was announced yesterday in Washington, but the 18,000 warehousemen and drivers were not expected to return to their jobs for at least another week, pending ratification.

The walkout in 15 Eastern states, not including New York City and Nassau, Suffolk, Westchester and Putnam Counties, has snarled package deliveries for consumers and businesses and forced the Postal Service to hire more than 6,000 people to handle the avalanche of parcel post.

"If and when ratification of the agreement occurs, we will resume operations in the 15 states as soon as possible," said a spokesman for United Parcel, who conceded that Christmas deliveries would be hampered in any case.

The tentative agreement was announced by the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, whose negotiators, led by the union's president, Frank E. Fitzsimmons, met through the night with negotiators for United Parcel.

The union said that the proposal would be submitted to the 25-member negotiating committee on Monday in Washington and then to representatives of the 74 striking locals on Tuesday.

From there it will go to rank-and-file ratification, but the teamsters would not say whether that would take place by mail ballot or in local union meetings. A teamster spokesman said that that decision would be made at the Monday and Tuesday meetings.

The teamsters also said that details of the agreement would not be made public until it had been submitted to the members. Wages have not been an issue in the strike. The company had reportedly agreed early on to match the economic terms of the teamsters' national master freight agreement, which would give the parcel workers a 33 percent raise over a three-year contract. Wages currently average $7 an hour.

The central issue had been the company's desire to have freedom to replace full-time workers with part-time workers, and there were other issues relating to the relationship between full-time and part-time employees.

A settlement to the strike had reportedly been reached three weeks ago, but final agreement was blocked, and the negotiators returned to the bargaining table. The walkout has halted United Parcel operations from Maine to the Carolinas except in New York City and the four nearby counties, where the local contract does not expire until June 30.

In a related development yesterday, it was disclosed that the teamsters' union had agreed to pay the strikers an additional $10 a week in strike benefits, retroactive to the start of the walkout.

Boston 'Combat Zone' Becomes Target of Police Crackdown

Adult Entertainment Area Center of Dispute After Outbreak of Violence

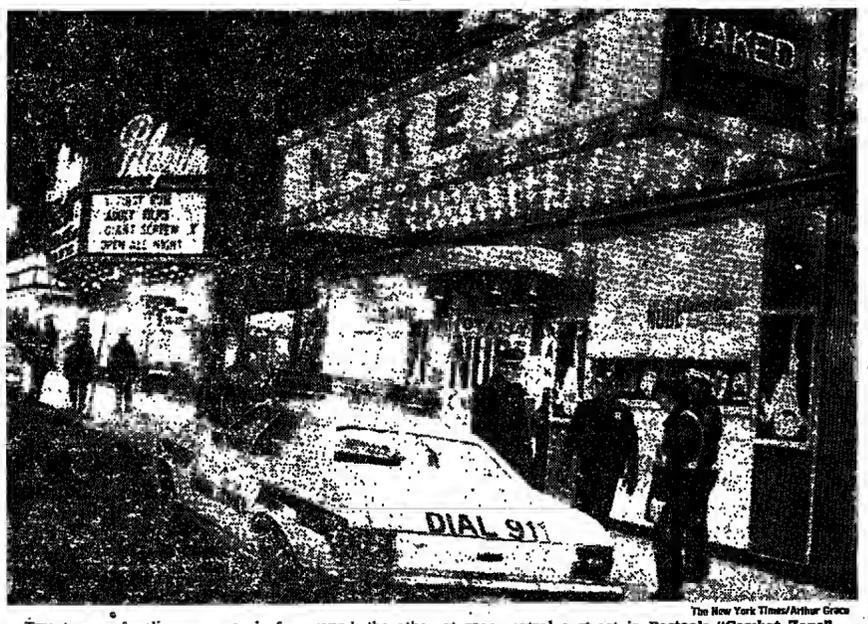

By JOHN KIFNER
Special to The New York Times

BOSTON, Dec. 3—An "adult entertainment district" established by city officials here two years ago has become the subject of a sudden, swift police crackdown.

The district, composed of two sleazy downtown blocks, was established to keep X-rated movies, strip tease bars and other pornographic establishments from spreading throughout the city. There was an attempt to call the district the "Liberty Tree Neighborhood," but it has become known across the nation as the "Combat Zone."

The current furor was caused by two developments. The first was the release of an internal police report charging widespread "incompetence and corruption" in the downtown police district that includes the Combat Zone. The second was the stabbing of two Harvard football players during an excursion to the area.

Now the Combat Zone has been saturated with policemen. Tactical Patrol Force members stand outside the doors of the strip joints. Vice squad detectives roam the streets. The sidewalks, normally the haunt of bands of women in platform shoes and short skirts, are empty.

Two teams of policemen—one in foreground, the other at rear—patrol a street in Boston's "Combat Zone"

Move Called a Failure

On Monday, declaring the attempt to locate the sexual activity a failure, Police Commissioner Joseph M. Jordan and county prosecutors met to plan a new crackdown, using the liquor laws and the District Attorney's major violators unit, set up last spring to deal with racial violence.

The concept behind Boston's zone, which clustered the X-rated businesses together, is somewhat different from the zoning being proposed in New York City, which attempts to keep the activity away from residential neighborhoods and spread it out.

The Boston area is filled with strip tease bars, many of them, according to their neon marquees, "world famous," X-rated movie houses, photo galleries in book stores selling various devices, including life-sized inflatable dolls.

In the bars, not much darker than a coal mine, the strippers ask the customers to buy them drinks, offering their company and the real or imagined possibility of further activity. Such mingling is against the state liquor laws, and the police say that there are men outside the bars with buttons to flick the lights in warning when inspectors come. The favorite drinks, usually costing $6 or $8, purports to be vodka and grapefruit juice. It needs refilling quickly.

In the early days of the zone's legitimacy, there was a good deal of talk about new lights and more tasteful exteriors. Trees were planted in a small park.

But the Combat Zone and Park Square a few blocks away also became more and more notable for bands of prostitutes. Now, the police say, there are also groups of female muggers working the district.

There is a strong sense of "anything goes" in the area and a tacit understanding that the police were to direct their law enforcement efforts outside the zone.

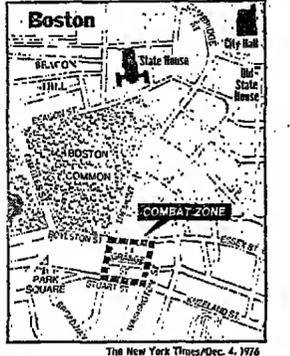

But in early November, just before leaving for a new job in suburban Maryland, then-Police Commissioner Robert J. DiGrazia released a 572-page report of his Special Investigation Unit charging that among other acts of "obvious gross incompetence" and "corrupt inattention" the police in the downtown District 1 had ignored rampant illegal sexual activity in the Combat Zone.

The report, which Mr. DiGrazia described as a "management tool," charged that there was widespread bookmaking and that criminals were sometimes warned of investigations. The police themselves, the report complained, triple-parked their private cars outside the police station.

The district commander, the report said, had personally directed traffic and provided a police motorcycle escort at the funeral in the Italian North End section of the mother of a reputed Mafia leader, Gennaro Angiola.

The heat was on the police, who began to put it in turn on the Combat Zone. But even as a new internal investigating unit was announced there were more developments.

The Harvard football team was having its annual post-season banquet at the Harvard Club on Nov. 13. After the dinner, more than 40 of the collegians went on to the Combat Zone. Leaving a place called the Naked 4 at the 2 A.M. closing, they encountered several women who reached enticingly into their van.

Missing Wallet Stirs Fight

They left after being rebuffed, the police said, but one of the students noticed that his wallet was missing and they gave chase. Three men stepped out of the shadows and stabbed two of the youths. One of the Harvard students, Andrew Puoppolo, has been in a coma since, stabbed in the heart.

The police began to saturate the area. The Herald American, a Hearst paper, wrote that the "city responded with a shudder," and began extensive coverage of the juicy Combat Zone story.

The police reported an unexpected victim that Friday night. An off-duty state trooper, Donald Gould, who had spent the evening in the area, was knocked down in a fight in a small coffee shop. The police took him to a nearby hospital, over his protest. But the 22-year state police veteran, the father of seven, jumped off the operating room table, refused to give his name and ran into the night, where he died of a heart attack.

Meanwhile, representatives of a prostitutes' union held a news conference to complain that the female muggers were giving the legitimate prostitutes a bad name. Debra Beckerman, the public relations agent for the Combat Zone, said that some of the women on the street had become "robber baron females" and called a news conference to charge that the situation was the fault of the police. There were complaints that the prostitutes had been driven into the nearby, fashionable Back Bay section.

Business was supposed to be down in the Combat Zone, but a visitor one recent night found the bars crowded with men in windbreakers and men in business shirts staring through the cigarette smoke at the naked dancers. A rapid succession of women asked if they might share a drink, including one who said she danced with a 10-foot box constrictor.

"It doesn't bother me," she explained. "I've been around reptiles all my life."

Auto Union Delays Decision on Return To the Federation

By PHILIP SHABECOFF
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—Leaders of the United Automobile Workers reached no decision on whether to return to the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations after a meeting today with George Meany, president of the federation.

The auto union, which has 1.4 million members, broke away from the federation in 1968 because of basic differences between Mr. Meany and the union's leader, the late Walter P. Reuther.

Leonard Woodcock, the auto union president, told reporters after today's meeting that "we came to no conclusions."

Mr. Woodcock said in reply to a question, "If reaffiliation comes, that I guess we can say that after this we're one day closer."

"A federation official said that the decision as to whether to reaffiliate was tentatively up to the U.A.W. They left of their own accord and they can come back at any time," he added.

Internal Union Politics a Factor

Observers of organized labor expressed belief that there was still a good chance the auto workers will rejoin the federation next May when the union holds its convention. Internal union politics are believed to be blocking reaffiliation as much as unresolved differences with the federation.

Mr. Woodcock, who is 63 years old, is retiring in May. There are several candidates trying to succeed him, and the question of reaffiliation is considered a likely issue in the contest for the union leadership.

Another obstacle is money. The union would have to pay per-capita dues if it rejoined the federation. The total could amount to about $2 million a year, a substantial bite out of the union's treasury, especially after the economic hardships it suffered in the recent recession.

Earl Mezey, the U.A.W. secretary-treasurer who also attended the meeting at the A.F.L.-C.I.O. headquarters here, said later that the conditions that had led to the departure of the union had not been corrected and that, therefore, he opposed reaffiliation. He did not explain what those conditions were.

One observer, however, said that the union objected to structural changes that had been made in the federation in the nineteen-sixties that the auto workers believed concentrated too much power in the office of the federation president at the expense of the member unions.

Marines Transfer Leader of Klan To Ease Tension at Camp Pendleton

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 3—Moving swiftly in an attempt to ease a tense racial situation at its Camp Pendleton base south of here, the Marine Corps last night arrested the leader of the Ku Klux Klan at the base and today flew him to a new base on the East Coast.

Remaining members of the pro-white organization on the base, meanwhile, complained of "what they called a 'reign of terror' against them, and a spokesman for the organization said it would file a lawsuit against the Marine Corps for alleged violation of members' civil rights.

"If they can do it to these people, no matter how unpopular their views might be, it means they can do it to anybody," said Thomas Metzger, a businessman who is serving as a spokesman for the Ku Klux Klan, declared.

Cpl. Daniel Bailey, 25 years old, the "exalted cyclops" of the Klan at Camp Pendleton, was arrested by the military police last night at the base, which is 70 miles south of here, after he refused to obey an order to move to another duty station, the Marine Corps said.

Transferred by Air

At 9:30 this morning, with armed military policemen beside him, he was placed on a military plane at San Diego Airport and flown to a base at New River, N.C. Corporal Bailey is scheduled for discharge from the Marines in February.

He was the last of 14 marines whose names were on a list of Klan members found at the base Nov. 14, the day after a gang of black marines attacked a group of whites, possibly in the belief that they were holding a Klan meeting. Six of the whites were injured, and 12 black marines face assault charges resulting from the attack.

The Marine Corps, while acknowledging that its regulations permit membership in the Klan, is apparently attempting to head off more conflicts between blacks and whites by transferring the group's leader. In an interview with The New York Times on Tuesday, Corporal Bailey asserted that members of his detachment were arming themselves and that rival black-power groups were doing the same thing as a prelude to a possible armed battle.

"We're trying to work within the political and legal system, but if they [blacks] want to start something, we're ready," he said then. Last night, he said he had refused the transfer to the new base because, he alleged, it was a discriminatory move in violation of Marine Corps regulations.

Corporal Bailey had accused the Marines of so-called "reverse discrimination" by catering to special demands of blacks in order to appease them as a way of maintaining racial peace. Among other things, he asserted that black-power groups were allowed to operate on the base while the Marine Corps had attempted to stop the Klan and infiltrate it through the use of intelligence agents.

Spokesmen for black marines on the other hand, accused members of the Klan chapter of provoking them with pro-white leaflets and Klan literature, of taking a militant pro-white stand in everyday life, and using racially derogatory language in dealing with them on occasion.

One curious point in the conflict: Between blacks and whites involved types of music to be played in enlisted men's social clubs. White marines claim that blacks had prevented them from hiring bands that played "country and Western" music favored by Southern whites and insisting on "soul" music favored by some blacks. A spokesman for the black marines, however, denied this assertion.

U.S. Sets $825 Million For Transit on Coast

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 3 (UPI)—Robert E. Patrick has indicated that the Federal Transportation Department is ready to allocate more than $825 million to help finance a $1 billion regional transportation program.

Mr. Patrick, the mass transportation chief, said yesterday that the money was for construction of more preferential freeway lanes and freeway on-ramp bypasses, the purchase of up to 500 more buses, and development of additional park-and-ride lots.

He said that Federal officials were less likely to grant money for two other local projects—development of a 2.75-mile downtown people-mover or construction of a 15-mile mass transit starter line from the San Fernando Valley to downtown Los Angeles along the Wilshire Corridor.

Execution Unit Reported In Massachusetts Prison

BOSTON, Dec. 3 (AP)—An "execution squad" reportedly is working within Walpole State Prison and is believed responsible for at least three inmates slaying there. The latest one was the Thanksgiving night strangulation of Robert A. Perrotta.

The state police said that Mr. Perrotta was killed apparently because inmates believed he had testified before a Federal grand jury on a charge of bank robbery.

"Perrotta's murder was nothing but an ordered execution from the outside," said William Bergin of the State Police.

He said that the order for the Perrotta slaying, and that of another inmate, was given by a prisoner in another institution.

Lieut. Bergin said that Mr. Perrotta, 32 years old, had refused to answer questions before the grand jury, but still was so frightened that he ordered his lawyer to get a complete transcript of the proceedings and send it to the inmate who eventually ordered his execution.

Transcript of News Conference by President-Elect Carter and Two Nominees

Following is a transcript of President-elect Jimmy Carter's news conference yesterday in Plains, Ga., as recorded by The New York Times through the facilities of ABC News.

OPENING STATEMENT

A statement to make before we begin. First of all, I want to welcome back to Plains, Ga., Fritz Mondale who has been down here with me quite a lot lately working on the selection of Cabinet officers and making other decisions about the transition period.

designed to act quickly before I went into office. I don't know whether or not it was justified. I wished several days ago, and still hope, that the steel companies might forego this increase or terminate the increase to indicate to the rest of the world that we're going to do all we can now and in the next administration to hold down the inflationary spiral.

2. Wage and Price Controls

Q. During the campaign you said you didn't want to use wage and price controls but that standby authority might be something that you would consider. I believe earlier today you said flatly that you would not request standby wage and price control authority during your administration. What made you change your mind?

A. I have no intention of asking the Congress to give me standby wage and price controls and have no intention of imposing wage and price controls in the next four years. If some national emergency should arise, and I think that's a very remote possibility, that would be the only indication I can see for a need for wage and price controls. I believe that the primary threat in these next four years is not continued unemployment, and I believe that with strong leadership, with my appealing to both industry and business on the one hand and labor on the other, to show constraints, that an adequate mutual responsibility will be assumed and unnecessary increases of prices and wages can be avoided. So I don't see any possibility or advisability of my having or asking for wage and price control authority.

Q. In light of the fact that the Consumer Price Index went up .6 of a point today—is the third time in three months that it's risen dramatically—I still don't understand what the purpose of not having standby authority might be. You need not use it unless you wanted to.

A. Well, I can't continue with you about it. My statement stands, I don't believe that I will need standby wage and price authority. I believe in a free market system and always have. And I believe that the constant threat of wage and price controls is sometimes a stimulation for unwarranted increases in wages and prices, and I want to remove that threat completely from business and labor and form a partnership with them so that we mutually can be responsible for unwarranted increases. That's one of the factors that perhaps might help to answer your question. Yes, sir, Mr. Cloud.

3. Action on Steel Prices

Q. Governor, could you explain in any more detail than you already have, which has been fairly general, the steps and processes that you followed in order to convey your message to the steel producers about your concern over the price increases?

A. Well, there was one Republican leader in the Senate who volunteered to help me by expressing my concern to the steel company leaders. And I also asked Mr. Lance, on my left, to contact the three major steel companies who control a great deal of the steel sales in this country and ask them not to join the first group of smaller companies who began the steel price increase, pointing to them the reason that I've just described to you.

They sent word back that they thought the steel price increase was justified, and that was the limit of my direct relationship with them through one Republican Senator and through Mr. Lance having been authorized to speak for me.

As you know, the Council on Wage and Price Stability has also made a public statement questioning the need for the steel price increase, and I think this is a combination of effort that has been made. There was some communication between my staff members and the staff members of the Council on Wage and Price Stability, but that was out at the executive level and it was not between myself and President Ford.

4. Cabinet-Selection Process

Q. Governor, you said earlier that your selection of the Cabinet-level officials would be a very deliberate and a fairly open process, comparable to the process by which you selected Vice President-elect Mondale. Some of the steps seem to have escaped us this time. I mean, I wonder, without causing embarrassment to persons not present, whether you could fill in some of the deliberations that took place and how you arrived at the choices you picked out.

A. I spelled out earlier, I think in the last press conferences here, the procedure that I would use and that's the one that I have been using. I spend, I would say, six or eight hours a day on the telephone calling different people around the nation in whom I have confidence, who have special knowledge about, for instance, foreign affairs, or defense capabilities, or finance, or international and domestic trade, or health, education and welfare or whatever the case might be, asking them for their advice on who ought to be considered for our Cabinet positions, or for lesser posts.

Then, out of that series of recommendations that come to me from knowledgeable people, there almost inevitably develops a pattern which shows that many different people from many walks of life with different backgrounds recommend a certain group of persons.

Then I turn that list over to my staff members, headed by Hamilton Jordan, and we do an in-depth analysis of that person, concentrating questions about that person or groups of persons. I would guess now that Hamilton is investigating, along with a substantial staff, about 70 people who are being considered for Cabinet posts about which I have not yet decided. And then out of that I form my own opinion, talk to the persons being considered either by telephone or in person and ultimately make a decision.

We are now facing the prospect of making a decision on a group of people—for instance, Secretary of Defense, National Security Council Adviser, Secretary of Treasury—and coordinated with that will be lesser positions in State, plus Commerce, Transportation and others, and I consider these in a cluster.

Q. You mentioned today that you didn't have to have interviews with them over an extended period of time to make my selection. As a matter of fact, I invited Cy Vance down early this week to spend the night with me and we talked five or six hours, and then he attended the economic briefing at the farmhouse early this week.

But I intend to do that as a normal process. There will be cases when I might interview two or three or perhaps more people for the same job. I did not do this on this occasion.

5. Conflicts of Interest

Q. Did you discuss with Mr. Vance the question of any possible corporate interests he might have that might have to be divested in connection with his job as Secretary of State? Do you foresee any problem in this area?

A. We'll have a very rigid requirement about the retention of corporate interests which might be in conflict. Those which are difficult to divest or which would create only a very rare conflict will be completely revealed to the public along with all other holdings. There is an aspect of the law that permits me to assume personal responsibility for excusing a member of the Cabinet from making the decision if there is a temporary or singular conflict. But Mr. Vance and Bert Lance both are familiar with this.

The most difficult decision, I think, has been faced by Bert Lance, who is the president of a major bank and I believe I'll let him answer the questions for himself, but I believe he intends to divest himself of the stock in the National Bank of Georgia.

6. Wage-Price Guidelines

Q. Governor, given your feelings about mandatory wage-price controls, could you tell us what you feel about voluntary wage-price guidelines as a way of holding down inflation?

A. I think that's a good option. I think that in the evolution of a standard or guideline for voluntary wage and price guidelines the best procedure is to do it quickly, to seek in consultation a common agreement with the business and labor leaders.

There are some very serious problems there though in that there is no single person or group of persons in the labor industry that can speak for all workers. And there are certainly no person or group of persons in the business community that could speak for all business leaders.

So it's primarily a matter of public awareness of what my proposals are and those would never be made on a unilateral basis just by me, unless I had substantial support in the business and labor community. For those goals that we set for ourselves it would be doomed to fail. So I would say that in this instance, if I use it, it would be done in close consultation with business, industry and labor leaders.

7. Rhetoric on Appointments

During the campaign, you attacked personal relationships which led to appointments in the executive branch and you also called for people from outside Washington to lead the government.

A. Yes, Q. In view of that, your appointments today of Mr. Vance, who is a close friend, and Mr. Vance, who has served in previous administrations, are they in conflict with your campaign rhetoric?

A. No, as a matter of fact, neither one of them are from Washington. Mr. Vance is from West Virginia and now lives in New York. Bert Lance is from the north Georgia mountains and still lives up there. I think he's now moved to Atlanta. But I'll have, by the end of my Cabinet selection procedure, I think a good geographical distribution of persons and I would say a fairly good distribution of those who served in Washington before and those who have not.

I think it would be almost ridiculous to bring someone into the Secretary of State's job who had no experience in international affairs, who had no experience in international economics, who had never negotiated a major conclusion among nations and who had very little acquaintance on their own part with the relationship with other countries. So I will balance it well, and I think that this is a good representation today of at least two categories, and later as more additional appointments, there will be a good representation, I think, of women and minority groups as well.

Q. Mr. Carter, you said that you check with people around the country regarding your candidates for appointments. Do you check with Republicans as well as Democrats? A. Yes, I do. Q. For men like Mr. Vance and Mr. Lance? A. Yes, I do. Q. Would you care to tell us whether you also checked with President Ford or any members of the present Administration? A. Well, I haven't checked with President Ford, but I have checked with members of the present Administration. Yes, yes, ma'am.

8. Humphrey-Hawkins Bill

Q. There seems to be some confusion on Capitol Hill on just where you stand on the Humphrey-Hawkins full employment bill. There are people up there who think that your support of it has been, so far, lukewarm, at best. Could you tell us exactly where you stand on that?

A. I don't know the exact form of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill at this point. So far as I know the Humphrey-Hawkins bill has not gotten out of either committee in the House or Senate, you know, ready to come to the floor. As I've said many times, the principle of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill is one that I think is admirable to cut down unemployment with a heavy dependence on the private sector of employment with reasonable goals for achievement, for a degree of unemployment, I think now, 4.5 percent at the end of four years, and as the Humphrey-Hawkins bill has been amended many, many times in the last two years, it's become closer and closer in consonance with my own beliefs. So far as the exact form of the Humphrey-Hawkins bill now, I can't say whether I favor it or not, I don't know it. But I'll do everything I can to reduce unemployment.

9. Kissinger-Vance Plans

Q. You and Mr. Vance have had a chance to talk a little bit now; have you talked about any possible traveling he might do between now and Jan. 20 with Secretary Kissinger, or a role for Secretary Kissinger after Jan. 20?

A. I think the amount of travel that Mr. Vance would do would be fairly minimal. I have discussed with Secretary Kissinger the need for the Secretary of State-designate to start meeting with him immediately to go over the remaining negotiations that are proceeding or waiting to proceed around the world, to make sure we know in detail unpublished aspects of previous negotiations that have been concluded, and to make sure there's an orderly transition.

Mr. Kissinger has assured me that this would be the case, that he's eager to meet with the Secretary of State as soon as I choose him for the next Administration. Does that answer your question?

Q. Well, how about Secretary Kissinger remaining in any way in touch with the State Department or in any semi-official role for you after Jan. 20?

A. Well, I think it would be inevitable that present members of the Administration would make themselves available to us to answer questions that might arise in the next four years about things that did occur under their own Administration about which we were not familiar. And this would particularly be the case in foreign affairs.

If they also knew leaders in the world, for instance, with whom Cy Vance or I are not acquainted, we would, I think, routinely call on Secretary Kissinger about an assessment of their attitude, perhaps past private and unofficial conversations, and seek his advice. I would not be reticent about that at all. If it became evident that in a particular part of the world Secretary Kissinger might be useful to help in a more active way, I would reserve the right to ask him to do so. But I have no plans to that effect at this point.

10. Shifts From Past Positions

Q. Governor, last summer at your economic briefings when you were still in favor of Congress for standby authority for price controls in case they might be needed, you mentioned a number of other possible steps, including one to provide for a waiting period on price increases so that both the President and the public could show their displeasure—was the phrase you used—that and strengthening the council on wage and price stability. In light of the change on standby authority, are you changing your mind on any of these other steps that you might use on fighting inflation?

A. No. Those would still be options that I would explore in the future. A. Does anyone have a question to ask Mr. Vance or Lance?

QUESTIONS TO VANCE

11. Strategic Weapons Agreement

Q. Mr. Vance, earlier today, the Governor mentioned that he might seek an interim agreement with the Soviet Union on strategic weapons. And I wondered whether by that he means a deal based on the Vladivostok Agreement which would separate the Backfire and Cruise missile portion of these talks and just go ahead with the limit the 2400-1320 missiles.

A. The two remaining issues, or the two packages remaining to be discussed, are the question of a Backfire and the Cruise missile. The first thing that I would have to do is to review the negotiating records, see where we are at that point and then meet with the President to discuss various alternative ways of approaching the problem, I think it's too early at this point for, and would be inappropriate for me until I know the whole negotiating record, know the status of situation as it now exists to give you any very definite answer as to how we'll proceed.

I would say, however, that the question of progress in the SALT negotiations is a matter of paramount importance as Governor Carter has said, and it will receive aggressive attention immediately.

12. Morality in Foreign Policy

Q. Governor Carter talked a great deal during the campaign about injecting morality back into our foreign policy. Do you agree with that, and do you think it's really possible in dealing with Chile and South Korea and India?

A. Yes I do think it's possible. I think that this is a fundamental precept that must be borne in mind. I think that we have to deal also with the practicalities of the situation as they exist, but the underlying principle must be a concern, and a deep concern, for human rights and the problem of human rights, and that certainly would be a factor in considering how we deal with other nations.

13. P.L.O. Role in Mideast

Q. Mr. Vance, in approaching Mideast negotiations it appears that again a sticking point may be the participation of the P.L.O. either by itself or within an Arab delegation. Could you state what your position is on that?

A. Again, I think it would be inappropriate for me to say anything without having had a chance to meet with Secretary Kissinger and to familiarize myself with all of the details of the negotiations, to talk about the substance of something like that and I'll be off on that today.

14. Plans for Future Travel

Q. The Governor just said that he doesn't expect you to be traveling very much. Does that mean we'll be seeing sort of an end to shuttle diplomacy that we've gotten kind of used to over the past eight years, and what will your style as Secretary of State? A. I think the question was "before inauguration."

Q. Well, will you be traveling afterward then?

A. I will travel to the extent necessary to travel. I am one who believes very deeply in picking the right people and delegating responsibility to the maximum extent possible. I think that the Secretary of State must be involved in the question of determining the principles and the policies which are used, together with the President, and where necessary the Secretary of State should play a part. But I think you should also delegate responsibility to competent and able negotiators and permit them to carry the ball as far as they can before the Secretary of State gets involved.

Q. May I follow up on that, Mr. Vance? I think the point John was trying to get at was whether you really envision yourself as much the personal negotiator as Mr. Kissinger has been. It's kind of a hard act to follow and I wondered if you do see yourself playing that same kind of role.

A. I have had some experience in negotiating in the past and when necessary I would expect to do that. But, as I said, I would hope, in the first instances, and in many instances, that this could and would be done by the people who have been picked as negotiators, and that it would be unnecessary for the Secretary of State to get involved.

15. Efforts in Middle East

Q. Mr. Vance, one more question, sir: In a general way, following the previous question, it appears now that from a number of signs emanating, that it could be a rightful moment for getting the Middle East situation back on track and under control, and this is the time to strike, so to speak. I'm wondering if you or President-elect Carter are thinking along these terms and if you're going to devote some effort relatively soon?

A. Let me say that there do appear to be some encouraging signs at this point; certainly the whole question of the Middle East is one of the most important questions that faces not only the United States but the world, and this is something to which attention should be given at a very early point. As to the substance, again, I would be off at this time until I have further knowledge.

CARTER: I think the time is about over. I might say in response to the last question that most of the parties to the Middle Eastern question have expressed themselves publicly and have frankly said that the next few months might be an appropriate time to make a special effort. And now that Cy Vance has agreed to serve as the next Secretary of State I believe it's appropriate that he spend a great deal of time consulting with Secretary Kissinger or others in the State Department to bring himself up to date about the present status and to get advice and counsel from Secretary Kissinger and from others who have been more immediately involved in those questions.

But we have, as you know, many places around the world where negotiations are either underway or are now or fairly well in a dormant stage, and I think, to be frank about it, a lot of the other nations are looking to the United States after their elections are over and a new inauguration and inaugurated officers take their place, that we assume a leadership role. But to answer specific questions about it, I think would be inappropriate at this point.

And I'd like to re-emphasize that we have an excellent government in office who are responsible for the affairs of our country and I want to bend over backwards along with the Cabinet designees not to act as though we were already in office. I reserve the right, as the President-elect to speak out on issues of importance when I think it affects our country and particularly the next four years, but as far as any official responsibility is concerned, that's still in the hands of President Ford's Administration.

And I would like to express again the extraordinary thanks that I feel to Mr. Ford for making possible a smooth transition period. He let Secretary Kissinger and Secretary Simon and Secretary Rumsfeld and others be available to us. We have worked very closely with them and I believe this is an almost unprecedented act of graciousness and cooperation that President Ford has exhibited. (At that point, Mr. Vance moved to the lectern.)

QUESTIONS TO LANCE

16. Bank Stock Divestiture

Q. Can you tell us, sir, about your plans to sell your bank stocks or whatever you have in mind? A. Well, those plans are still being developed. The question of divestiture has already been reached but how to do it and when to do it has not been defined, totally and completely. I will be glad to make that public as soon as that is reached.

17. Bank Loan to Carter

Q. I ask particularly because I believe your bank has loaned Governor Carter's warehouse some money and — A. It's a good loan. I wish all of them that we had was that good.

Q. (unclear)—Any potential conflict?

A. I don't see any conflict. I think the response to the question, and I'm being very, very serious and speciffor not taking decisive steps to conclude the strategic arms talks along the lines of the 1974 Vladivostok agreement, which allowed the United States and the Soviet Union each to have a total of 2,400 offensive long-range bombers and missile launchers.

U.S. Sought to Shelve Issue. Of that total, each side would be permitted 1,320 missile launchers, equipped with independently targetable warheads.

The negotiations have been at an impasse because of inability of the two sides to agree whether the Backfire bomber and the United States submarine cruise missiles should be included in the 2,400 total and, if so, under what restrictions. The Americans, who disagreed inside the Administration on the question, proposed leaving the two disputed areas out of the agreement, but this was rejected by Moscow.

Appearing on the Today Show on NBC, Mr. Carter said "it was gratifying" to have received a message conveyed by Treasury Secretary William E. Simon that Mr. Brezhnev would go out of his way to avoid a crisis with the United States. Asked then to comment on Mr. Brezhnev's public appeal to get the strategic arms talks moving, Mr. Carter said he agreed that "the SALT talks have been stalled."

ic about this, that when those loan arrangements were made back early in 1975 that there were very few people around who thought that Governor Carter might be the next President of the United States, and I ought to get some A-plus marks for being that knowledgeable and foreseeing in that regard.

So I'm extremely proud of that relationship. I've long had a high degree of interest in the development of agriculture in the State of Georgia. I think it's one of the great resources that we have. I can't think of any better way than to see it develop than an Atlanta-Ga. bank move out into the Plains, Ga. area and make that sort of loan. And so I'm proud of that loan. It's a good loan and I don't see any conflict whatsoever.

Q. Will you retain an interest in the bank that you have in Calhoun, Ga. A. Well, I would hope that might be able for me to do so. That again has not yet been determined and we will have to answer those questions as we go forward.

Q. How large is your interest in? A. Percentage-wise? Q. Yes. A. Somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 to 12 percent.

18. Plans for Reorganization

Q. Mr. Lance, will you be the driving force behind reorganization in the Carter Administration? A. Well, I'm sure that the President is going to be the driving force behind the reorganization. I only hope that I'll be able to keep up with him and carry out what he wants to do. Q. Have you talked about that? A. We have talked about that and he's totally committed, as he has said previously, to the reorganization process and I'm looking forward to being a part of the process and hope that I can be called later on as a driving force in the reorganization effort.

19. Job Offers From Carter

Q. Mr. Lance, were you also offered the job of Treasury Secretary—could you have had that if you wanted it? I told Governor Carter that I was totally committed to him and whatever he wanted me to do and whatever he thought I might be able to do and that I was acting at his bequest and that I had no preference about any job.

20. Cutting Federal Payrolls

Q. Mr. Lance, when you were handling transportation here in the state, you managed to cut employee rolls there, that's what's said. Now you're going to be trying to head a reorganization on a much larger scale. Given the realities of civil service and bureaucracy and what you can do, would you foresee in the period coming that you would actually be able to trim Government rolls in Washington?

A. I don't think that we can talk to the specifics of numbers at this point in time. I think one thing that's awfully important is to talk about the attitude of the administration that's going to be coming into power, how they plan to do things and how well they're doing things. I have found in my experience in state government that state employees—and I'm sure that Federal employees represent a cadre of people who have a high degree of public service—ideas about serving this country—that they want to see that carried out, that they can do a good job, they want to be given some recognition when they do a good job and I think the kind of attitude that we talk about from the leadership standpoint in the Carter administration is going to be awfully important going forward. I think the productivity obviously can be increased greatly and will be increased. When we start talking about specific numbers I think you'll see that develop over a period of time.

21. Philosophy on the O.M.B.

Q. Mr. Lance, as you know in the past the O.M.B. has been some sort of a feared superdepartment in Washington. I'm glad to hear that. Q. A little of the philosophy of what the proper role of the O.M.B. is in dealing with other government agencies and with Congress.

A. Well, again, I think that the hallmark of the Carter administration is going to be trying to unify this country and bringing people together. I would foresee the role of the director of O.M.B. be such role—that we would have the kind of communication, the kind of relationships within the institution that would work toward that end. So I don't think that there ought to be feared superagency type thing—it has to be run in a hard-core, business-like efficient manner, and I think it will be run that way.

MODERATOR: Thank you Governor and gentlemen.

Carter Is Traded to Bucks; 76ers Get Two Draft Picks

Fred Carter, whose "gunner" style of playing basketball became redundant to the Philadelphia 76ers after the team acquired Julius Erving, was traded yesterday to Milwaukee in exchange for the Bucks' second-round choices in 1977 and 1978.

The Bucks, whose won-lost record of 4-30 is the poorest in the National Basketball Association, will use Carter to provide more floor leadership and more scoring punch.

Carter, a guard, led the 76ers in scoring in three of the last four years, but his playing time dwindled after Erving, the former New York Nets, joined the club. He played in only 16 games, averaging 6.9 points. The native of Philadelphia has been in the N.B.A. eight years, the last six with the 76ers.

To fill Carter's spot, the 76ers activated Mike Dunleavy, a rookie from the University of South Carolina who has been on the injured list.

Marvin Barnes, the flamboyant forward of the Detroit Pistons, pleaded no contest in Detroit to a charge of carrying a concealed weapon as he was about to board a commercial aircraft. Judge James Canham of the Wayne County Circuit Court set a hearing for Dec. 15.

Carrying a concealed weapon is a felony in Michigan, with a penalty of two to five years in prison.

It was not clear what effect the Michigan case would have on a sentence for parole violation that was ordered earlier this week in Rhode Island.

After Barnes was convicted of assaulting a Providence College teammate with a fire iron in 1974, the sentence was suspended in favor of three years' parole. But after Barnes' arrest in Detroit, a Rhode Island judge said the Michigan charge violated terms of the parole and he ordered Barnes to report to state prison Dec. 14.

Jack Nicklaus and Jerry Pate were designated co-winners of the male-golfer-of-the-year award by the Golf Writers Association of America. Judy Rankin was chosen the female player of the year.

Nicklaus was the leading money-winner on the Professional Golfers Association tour with $266,426. Pate, in his first year on the tour, won the United States Open and two other tournaments. Mrs. Rankin won six events and became the first woman golfer to win more than $100,000 in one year.

Skip Manning of Bogalusa, La., was named rookie of the year in National Association for Stock Car Auto Racing. Manning won the honor even though another rookie, Terry Bivins, had a track record that was one point higher in performance points. Manning went over the top in the grading for personal and professional conduct by a special panel of NASCAR officials.

Johnny Bench, the Cincinnati Reds' catcher, presented a silver commemorative medal to President Ford for the President's support of the No Greater Love program. The program helps children of prisoners of war, of servicemen missing or killed in action, and of hospitalized veterans. Bench recently was named president of No Greater Love.

When Blair, president and chief operating officer of the Pittsburgh Penguins, has been removed from control of the club's hockey operations. Baz Bastien, the assistant general manager who was hired by Blair before the start of this season, has been placed in charge.

Blair was a member of a group of investors who salvaged the Pittsburgh National Hockey League franchise from bankruptcy in July 1975. Whether Blair will retain his part ownership in the franchise is still uncertain.

The Chicago White Sox picked up a free agent from the re-entry draft by signing Tim Nordbrook, an infielder, to a two-year contract. Nordbrook, who is 27 years old and "predominantly a shortstop," played last year for the Baltimore Orioles and California Angels while letting his option run out.

A White Sox vice president, Roland Hemond, said, "Nordbrook is a very fine defensive ballplayer, and it gives us additional depth. He hasn't been a strong hitter, but then he's played very little in the last two years."

John Wooden, former basketball coach of the University of California, Los Angeles, was resting comfortably in a Los Angeles hospital after treatment for the same type of artery condition that had sent him to the hospital four years ago.

Wooden, whose Bruins won 10 National Collegiate Athletic Association titles, retired prior to last season and is now 63. His doctor said Wooden had not suffered a heart attack and that no arterial surgery would be necessary. The former coach has been maintaining a busy schedule with writing and with television and radio appearances.

Long Shots Bring 3 Cheers at the Big A Long-shot players enjoyed a little Christmas cheer at Aqueduct yesterday when lightly regarded horses accounted for a $906,600 daily double, a $698.60 exacta and a $3,188 triple. The price of the ticket in each case was $2.

Roger Velez started and finished the parimutuel parade, riding Rumancoke to a $23.40 victory in the first race and taking the ninth aboard File Ruse, at $54.40. Rumancoke and File Ruse each finished a neck ahead of their nearest rival in photo-finishes.

Monsi, the $40.40 winner of the second race, also was involved in a photo-finish. This 3-year-old gelding, ridden by Steve Cauthen, triumphed by a head over Genuine Silver to complete the big daily double. From a 6-9 double, the winning combination in the third race exacta went to 12-11—the two horses with the post positions furthest outside in a 12-horse field.

Carmela Mil, a 28-1 shot who paid $58.20, won the six-furlong race by half a length from Karin Jones, a 6-1 chance. Robert Kotenko rode Carmela Mil, a 2-year-old filly who hadn't won in 11 starts.

In the ninth-race triple, the winning combination was 5-7-1, with False Arrest finishing second to File Ruse at odds of 12-1 and Deb Vivian, the 5-2 favorite, taking third.

Favored Chief Tamaquaco, ridden by Angel Cordero, won the featured eighth race as Jacques Who, a perennial runner-up, finished second in a three-horse photo. Jacques Who wound up a neck ahead of the winner and a head ahead of third-place Banian.

It couldn't be said that Jacques Who was a born loser, because he consistently brings back checks by finishing in the money. But he's not a born winner, either. Yesterday's start was the 22d of the year for the 6-year-old gray horse, owned by Jacques Wimpfeimer, and the 11th time this season he has been in the money. But he has won only once, his 50 percent in-the-money average coming primarily from five seconds and five thirds.

Quiet Little Table, the winner of the Dwyer Handicap last July, heads a field of 10 today at the Big A in the $54,600 Discovery Handicap. Eddie Maple will ride the Meadowlark colt in the 1 1/2-mile race for 3-year-olds.

The early second choice, is Father Hogan, a two-time stakes winner.

Watson's 66 Paces U.S. To Golf Lead Over Japan

HARIMA, Japan, Dec. 3 (AP)—Tom Watson shot a 66, a Harima Club course record, and led the Americans to a nine-stroke lead today after two rounds of the sixth annual United States-Japan golf tourney.

Watson's six-under-par effort, one stroke less than the 67 shot by the first-round leader, Hideo Yashida, gave him a share of the individual lead with Tom Weiskopf after 36 holes. Both have 137s. The American squad has an 11-under-par 565, the best eight scores of the nine players. They had been a stroke behind after the first round.

Tennessee Gets Majors; Cornell Pursuing Blackman shaky for the last two years and the Vols wanted to release him. But they obviously retained him this past season, in which the team had a 6-5 record, because they knew they could not lure Majors from Pitt until Dorsett finished his college career.

Pittsburgh officials hope to name Majors' successor before the Sugar Bowl game. George Welsh of Navy, Frank Burns, who coached Rutgers to an undefeated and untied season, and Joe Yulica of Boston College are being considered for the job, as are Pitt assistants.

However, the prime candidate seems to be Jackie Sherrill, the head coach at Washington State. Sherrill was an assistant under Majors at Iowa State and at Pittsburgh before going to Washington State this season.

Ed Bozick, executive assistant to Posvar, said Pittsburgh also will call Ara Parseghian about the job. However, Bozick held little hope that the former Notre Dame head coach would accept. Parseghian, who resigned in 1974 after 11 seasons with the Irish, has claimed repeatedly that he does not want to return to college coaching.

Worried About Bowl

When Majors gets to Tennessee he may have left behind a team that will receive more awards and trophies for achievement than any college football squad has amassed in one season. Pitt has already won the Lambert Trophy as the season's outstanding major Eastern team, and Dorsett has won the Heisman Trophy. If the Panthers beat Georgia they may pick up as many as nine other individual and team awards.

Of prime concern to Pitt officials is what effect Majors' departure will have on the outcome of the bowl game. They seem to count upon the large number of experienced juniors and seniors on the team to carry the day.

Posvar said, "I'm a layman in this but our experts tell me that the strong leadership of our upper classmen will make a difference."

However, Dorsett said Tuesday that he thought if Majors announced how he was leaving for Tennessee it "will have an effect on the team."

Cornell has scheduled a news conference for Tuesday at the Cornell Club in New York, where it is expected the Big Red will announce the appointment of Blackman.

Iran Tops Soviet Union In Wrestling Tournament

TEHRAN, Iran, Dec. 3 (UPI)—Iran won the 10th Arasymr international freestyle wrestling championships today for the 10th time, with the Soviet Union finishing second, also for the 10th time.

Russians won the two heavyweight classifications and the lightest title, 48 kilograms, while Iran dominated the other lightweight divisions. One American, Erland Onlit in the 180-kilogram division, showing little talent to back up his vast size and weight, literally squashed his way to the bronze medal in the super heavyweight division. that average is the Jets' all-around utility man, Lou Piccone. He is averaging 24.2 yards a return. He may be a very busy man tomorrow.

Piccone also has been designated emergency defensive back. The Jets have four backs who can walk with assistance. Two defensive backs are with injuries.

"If another gets hurt on Sunday said Coach Lou Holtz, "I'll put in Lou Keller. He's a linebacker. And if I have to go to still another defensive back I'll put in Piccone."

Part of Shuttle System

Piccone normally is part of the Jets' system of wide receivers, but also is spotted as a running back.

The other kick-returner is Lou Giammona, who fumbled twice last week, once on a kickoff return, refused to use the excuse, but he is playing with a broken right wrist.

Japan gave him a share of the individual lead with Tom Weiskopf after 36 holes. Both have 137s. The American squad has an 11-under-par 565, the best eight scores of the nine players. They had been a stroke behind after the first round.

Viewers will see a Lions squad that has yielded an average of only 1.5 yards a rush and 113.9 yards a game passing, including seven by the Jets' quarterback, Dan Campbell.

The Lions' first-place defensive ranking is based on a total of rushing, passing, but they are not a defensive team, either. In their conference only four teams have a better scoring differential.

The quarterback is Greg Landry, who has completed almost 60 percent of passes and has been intercepted six times. He ranks ahead of such quarterbacks as Fran Tarkenton and Tom Brady.

The only Jet in the top four of the category is the place-kicker, Pat Lee. He stands fourth in the American conference with a 69.2 percentage in goal efficiency. He has connected nine of 13 attempts.

Puetz to be Married

Garry Puetz, the Jets' right tackle and Cindy Weeks of La Plata, Md., will be married next Friday. Puetz is the sister-in-law of Joe Fields, who plays center a few feet away from Puetz. The prospective bride and groom met at Fields' wedding last February.

that average is the Jets' utility man, Lou Piccone. He is 24.2 yards a return, a very busy man tomorrow. Piccone also has been an emergency defensive back. He has four backs who can play with injuries. Two defensive backs, "If another gets hurt," said Coach Lou Holtz, "I'll put in a linebacker. I'll put in a short shot, past Daniel."

Part of Shuttleworth's system of wide receivers, also spotted as a running back. The other kick-returner is Giamonna, who fumbled the week, once on a kickoff. He refused to use the excuse of playing with a broken right hand. He is right-handed, and he can't use his left hand. He can't use his right hand, and he still should have been in the hall," he said.

"Oh, sure," said David Piccone, who extended their game, it will be interesting to see how the Jets play over Channel 2.

Jets are seen on Channel 2, which means CBS-TV, they have been on 2 tomorrow had the viewers will see a Lion's pass, including seven by safety, James Hunter.

The Lions' first place in the passing. But they are not a safe team, either. In their only four teams have a differential.

The quarterback is Greg has completed almost 60 passes, and has been intercepted six times. He ranks ahead of Straubach.

The only Jet in the top category is the place-kicker. He stands fourth in the league with a 69.2 percent efficiency. He has nine of 13 attempts.

About New York

Police Duty, and the Stresses

By FRANCIS X. CLINES

One of the ugliest terms in the police officer's vernacular is the reference to "Bow and Arrow Squad," or the "Bibber Gun Squad"—a pejorative designation of the groups of police officers who have been blamed for their misdeeds because of some signs of instability or protectively transferred from streets to paperwork.

But, more importantly, the police officer and his partner, Capt. William P. Rose, a questioning, intelligent manager with searching blue ranks, signs of mental stress, does not meet one bit, because it is a measure of the resistance to that help he is to offer.

One day, a 15-year-old boy was shot by a police officer, shot point blank in the head in what the prosecutor obtaining murder charges against the policeman, described as a "totally provoked, unjustifiable, intentional act." While the police union has been defending the officer in its usual way—describing a line-of-duty act that the public is not supposed to be able to appreciate—the initial specimen was that the officer, if guilty, it have suddenly soaped without a trial.

But that the negative info files in the department are waiting for the other day a lieutenant advised for the expunging from his file the fact that, when he was 5 years old, his parents signed a petition once construed as sympathy to some Communist cause. That of thing is there. But the ideal for Captain Rose's staff—a helpful of alert from the concerned colleague of a man undergoing stress—is Knowing well the subtle things that, ideally, he needs to track, the captain instead is left to looking for more overt symptoms in the negative info files, hoping superiors submit them. Such things as excessive sick leave, a drop in performance ratings, and the almost Freudian symptom of a police officer's misplacing his shield or gun.

Each policeman's negative info file is culled once a year. It used to be done every six months, until economy measures cut personnel. It is done manually, although the captain's superior, Chief of Bureau of Personal Services, J. Behan, hopes to see it done by computer eventually. When something serious is turned up, the file might be put on quarterly reinspections, and eventually the captain might dispatch a sergeant to the precinct of a troubled officer to attempt inquiries. This is a difficult task, but the captain says it can be surprisingly effective, because a colleague approached in confidence, although wary of outside authority, often welcomes the arrival of help for a friend.

Even where this method gets an officer into the department's counseling services, success is not guaranteed. Recently, a police officer committed suicide on the Brooklyn Bridge, stopping his car on the way to a counseling session.

There are 26,000 members on the force, and a total of about 150 have been dismissed for personal problems in the last three years. Currently, 352 active members have had to turn in their guns, some for such simple reasons as a temporary hospitalization for physical disorder, and about a dozen more are stripped of their weapons each year. "That's a pretty drastic step in this department, taking away a man's gun," Captain Rose notes.

But some critics, such as Vincent Bouza, a high ranking officer who quit the force recently, contend there are hundreds of additional "psychos" and misfits who would be no loss to the department, but who are kept on. He hardly wins the public endorsement of the department brass with this charge, but it should be noted that in the last round of hiring before the fiscal crisis, the department took a relatively revolutionary step in rejecting, for a variety of reasons, including psychological, 250 of the 4,000 probationary policemen. In the past, most would have been routinely accepted.

Contrary to critics, Captain Rose feels the department has an adequate program for trying to uncover potentially dangerous police officers. His program is four years old, and gained impetus through earlier white police officer-black youth shootings. He says it is making progress in ending the stigma attached to the idea of rehabilitation. But he agrees the "Bow and Arrow Squad" is still a live term of reference among the police.

Bridge: Double Revoke by Partners

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

During the last deal of the last event of last week's fall nationals in Pittsburgh, one table suddenly became high-spirited. For reasons that were not to staring players from surging tables. Gall Mossiker, now in Panama City, Panama, were leg back in their chairs and laugh-ingly uncontrollable.

 West led the diamond queen.

When the declarer then continued leading the spade jack, something ordinary happened. East and West, perhaps weary at the end of a five-day tournament, both discarded a card. For both opponents to revoke on same round of trumps is probably a record, and is at worst a tie. North and South gazed at each other in a wild surmise, as another Panamanian immigrant is said to have done ago. North could not be quite what was happening, but it began to hit that his partner knew that somebody had committed a misdemeanor, but it was not lace to say anything. He continued the heart ace, and East became a worried—his heart stopper seemed to have disappeared.

venting the establishment of his attempted revoke, and left the heart deuce on the table as an exposed card. Remembering his duty to his team to make the most of the possibilities, Hand retraced the heart ace, as he was entitled to do, entered his hand with a club and took the marked finesse of the heart eight. If West had held an honor, he could have saved the situation by playing it, but as it was East had to play his exposed deuce. High hearts were played from dummy, and West ruffed the third round with his trump ace, quite unaware of the fact that he had revoked and that his play would send both opponents into fits of laughter. The declarer made the rest of the tricks and West was charged one trick for the revoke—the penalty under the current duplicate laws if the revoking side does not win the revoke trick. "I didn't think they could make 12 tricks," West said sadly, "after I had won the first trick and I still had the ace of trumps."

California Congressman Convicted of Theft

ANTHONY ANA, Calif., Dec. 3 (AP)—Sentative Andrew Hinshaw, Republican of California, was convicted today of misappropriation and petty theft of funds while serving as Orange County assessor in 1972. Jury deadlocked on two counts of grand larceny. The majority verdict, said the jury foreman, Paul Steier of Laguna Hills. Judge Frank Domenichini declared a mistrial on the two conspiracy counts, means that Mr. Hinshaw could be tried on the charges. Verdicts in the 10½-week trial in Superior Court came after 17 hours of deliberation spread over five days. Sentencing was set for Feb. 4, 1977, along with hearings on defense motions for a trial and dismissal of charges. Hinshaw, 52 years old, faces a sentence of one to 10 years in state prison on the misappropriation conviction and a $300 fine and/or six months in jail for petty theft. Mr. Hinshaw, who had already been convicted of Federal bribery charges, was defeated in the June primary. The Federal conviction is under appeal.

Youth Indicted in Knife Slaying
A 16-year-old youth from Levittown, Pa., was indicted by a Nassau County grand jury on a charge of "second-degree murder in the knife slaying of George Fodor, 18, on Thanksgiving night. The suspect, Barry Caputo, pleaded not guilty in County Court in Mineola, L.I., and bail was set at $20,000. If convicted, he could receive a prison term of from 25 years to life.

Justifying a Legend

POCAHONTAS: The Life and the Legend. By Frances Mossiker. 383 pages. Illustrated. Knopf, $12.95.

Who does not know the marvelous story of Capt. John Smith of the Jamestown Colony, how he was captured by the Indians and how he was saved at the very last second from having his brains bashed in on that January day in 1608 by the comely Pocahontas, the favorite daughter of the Powhatan chieftain, who flung herself on Smith as the bludgeons were about to descend upon him? The story is recounted with various degrees of acceptance in all the history books; and for those who learn their history from fiction, it was brilliantly and wickedly satirized in John Burt Foster's "The Sot-Weed Factor."

The source for the story is John Smith himself in his "Generall Historie of Virginia, New England, and the Summer Isles," published in London 16 years after the event and eight years after the tragic death of Pocahontas. In reciting other aspects of his life, Captain Smith was not above burnishing a good anecdote or in borrowing an adventure and fitting himself to it. Thus, in his own age, he cut a most impressive figure, and his heroic stature was accepted well into the 19th century. At that point, the historians of the Northern victors in the Civil War—among them Harry Adams—began to rewrite the nation's history and they leaped upon Smith as an impious fraud, suggesting he had made up his tale. It was pointed out that he could have borrowed it from Richard Hakluyt's travel books, and that, moreover, the story of the enamored princess is universal. A folk hero of the South—particularly of Virginia—was toppled. Now comes Frances Mossiker, her Texas origins conjoined with education at Smith and Barnard Colleges, to take a softer view of the Pocahontas affair, and one that appeals to late 20th-century sensibilities.

Ring of Truth
Summarized all too briefly, Miss Mossiker conjectures that Smith's hairbreadth rescue has the ring of truth to it, however much he probably embellished a detail here and there. To reach this conclusion, Miss Mossiker calls in both the formidable resources of cultural anthropology and modern studies of American Indian history. She contends that even though the English man's initial approaches to the Indians were haughty and unskillful, the Indians were nonetheless prepared to follow a policy of peaceful coexistence, with a touch of fraternity for good measure. In this reading, the capture, near-execution and dramatic rescue of Smith become a Powhatan tribal adoption rite, whereby the Tidewater Indians were displaying their good will to the tiny band of Britons huddled at Jamestown. Miss Mossiker presses her interpretation to what I regard as an unlikely length by asserting that the episode "reminds us that at least once in our history there existed the possibility of interracial accommodation." "A flicker of hope," she adds, was kindled in that strange and eerie ceremony, a spark that the colonizers proceeded to extinguish—if indeed they ever recognized that it existed.

In reconstructing Smith and Pocahontas, Miss Mossiker has been obliged to act as a detective, for there are no reliable contemporary accounts of the early years of the Jamestown settlement; nor were the British careful observers of Indian politics and mores. By taking the reader with her as she sorts out the most likely facts, the most reasonable possibilities and probabilities, Miss Mossiker gives, in effect, a short course in cultural anthropology. I found it completely absorbing, for Miss Mossiker is a sophisticated doctress who possesses a prose style of a high order.

The amount of research she has undertaken is awesome, yet it does not appear painfully obvious that she is reading from index cards or displaying her scholarship for the benefit of other savants. Out of this emerges a likely portrait of Smith in the round and a fairly detailed one of Pocahontas.

Intimate Portrait

That Miss Mossiker's picture of the Indian princess is intimate flows from the fact that we know a good deal about her middle years and death. After Smith returned to England—did he really regard this as desertion? Did Pocahontas feel rejected?—the princess became detribalized and married John Rolfe, the tobacco planter. She went with him to England, where she became a wooder, and died there in 1617. Her age then was not known for certain, but a good guess is that she was under 25. In any event, Pocahontas was a remarkable person. Fully bright, adaptable, yet reserved and dignified, she made her way with uncommon agility to an alien milieu. The epic qualities that have been conferred on her by legend seem in the main to be justified. Miss Mossiker does not have a high opinion of European settlers or adventurers in the New World in their relations with the Indians, whose tribal customs and life were enormously sophisticated. Almost always truthful, the Europeans provoked their hosts into unequal armed conflicts, slaughtered them by the thousands and enslaved other thousands. It is not a history to be recounted with pride, and Miss Mossiker offers very little to those ancestor-worshippers among us who trace their lineage to the early settlers. "Pocahontas" is nonetheless not a syllabus of errors so much as it is an attempt to provide a clear and reasonable picture of first steps on this continent, to convey what it must have been like in Jamestown in 1607 and the next few years, to tell us about the cultural shocks for the British as well as for the Indians. In this, Miss Mossiker has succeeded brilliantly.

Cyrus Vance for State . . .

In announcing his choice for Secretary of State, President-elect Carter said he had received "almost unanimous recommendations from around the country" and even some endorsements from abroad for Cyrus Roberts Vance. This is an extraordinary and well-deserved tribute to one of New York's most distinguished citizens.

Governor Carter emphasized that he had chosen "a superb adviser and negotiator, a level-headed administrator and manager." Mr. Vance has demonstrated all those qualities in widely varying assignments, showing especially an unusual knack for the sensitivity and timing necessary to advance a tough negotiation toward settlement.

With the open wound of Cyprus still festering as the result of diplomatic failure and the massive Turkish invasion of 1974, Mr. Vance's appointment recalls one of his greatest achievements. In two weeks of ceaseless shuttling from Athens to Ankara to Nicosia and back, he headed off a comparable Cyprus tragedy in 1967. He is known to believe that more adroit diplomacy, rooted in willingness to accept the advice of specialists on the area, could have averted the 1974 disaster.

One quality certain to distinguish Mr. Vance's conduct from that of Henry A. Kissinger is his regard for the United States Foreign Service. Mr. Vance does not hold career diplomats in awe; but they can be certain of a respectful hearing during crises in their areas of responsibility. He is likely also to restore Washington's relations with its European allies to the priority position they deserve.

As Governor Carter made clear yesterday, however, this will not mean any slackening in the effort to "seek peaceful relationships" with the Soviet Union and progress toward reciprocal disarmament. In his press appearance at Plains, Mr. Vance wisely declined to be drawn into specifics on Middle East peace prospects or other issues. A large measure of continuity in foreign policy is inevitable but on his record, Mr. Vance may be far more sensitive than Mr. Kissinger to legitimate third-world aspirations.

In an indiscreet interview some time ago, Governor

Carter's assistant, Hamilton Jordan, indicated that in its zeal to present "new faces, new ideas," the new Administration would pass over Cyrus Vance. The President-elect provided the proper answer to this kind of bizarre thinking yesterday when he said it would have been "almost ridiculous" to choose a Secretary of State untested in international affairs. Governor Carter has chosen wisely.

. . . Lance for Budget

Unlike Mr. Vance, the President-elect's choice for director of the Office of Management and Budget is an unknown quantity to most of the nation, a self-styled "country banker" from Georgia—Thomas Bertram Lance.

It appears clear that the principal role of the new budget director will be to press reorganization of the Federal Government, a major theme of the Carter campaign, and to run the budget office, in Mr. Lance's words, "in a hard-nosed, businesslike, efficient manner."

In Atlanta where he heads the National Bank of Georgia, Mr. Lance is known as a vigorous, aggressive, accessible and efficient executive. A long-time friend and political supporter of the President-elect, he played a key role in pushing Governor Carter's government reorganization plans through the Georgia Legislature. Mr. Lance faces a formidable challenge in attempting to master the far greater complexities of the Federal bureaucracy with which he has had no previous experience.

The new budget director does not appear to be suited to play the larger role of helping to shape broad national economic policies that has been assumed by some of his predecessors, like Charles Schultze in the Johnson Administration and George Shultz under President Nixon. That task, which must take top priority in the new Administration, especially in view of the latest reports of rising unemployment and inflation, will now fall more heavily on the new Treasury Secretary and members of the Council of Economic Advisers whose selection has become a matter of the most urgent concern.

Retreat From Learning

The State Education Department reports that enrollment in New York's colleges and universities this fall has declined by a substantial 6.1 percent. Since high schools are still graduating students in growing numbers, the decline is obviously not yet caused by a shrinking birth rate but by a retreat from college-going.

This retreat is caused partly by economic factors and partly by the new wave of hostility to higher education engendered by those pragmatists who fear the effects of an "overeducated" populace. A significant part of the recently expanded higher education constituency is now beginning to be squeezed out.

The severely curtailed services of the City University illustrate the effects of that squeeze. Even more serious than the institution's total enrollment decline by more than 20 percent is the drop in its part-time enrollment by more than 30 percent. This precipitous drop suggests a social change of shattering dimensions. Part-time students represent in large measure an upward mobility made possible by continuing education.

When the end of free tuition at CUNY was proposed, elaborate assurances were given that state scholarships would pick up the tab for all needy applicants. Unfortunately, fears that such optimism would prove illusory, particularly for part-time students, have now materialized.

To dismiss that socially and economically dangerous trend as peculiar only to CUNY is to ignore developments in all of higher education. The State University system reports a total enrollment drop of 4 percent. Although the state's private institutions register a 6 percent increase in their full-time enrollment, that gain will be of small comfort when measured against their 14 percent loss on their part-time graduate rolls. Incomplete reports on nationwide trends indicate that the continued enrollment growth projected by the United States Office of Education has abruptly disappeared.

Youths from affluent homes are not likely to be affected by these changing tides; the sacrifices will be made largely by the children of the poor and the lower middle class. The present trend threatens to scuttle the democratizing force of continuing education.

Agriculture's Folly

Earl Butz may be gone from the Department of Agriculture, but his spirit lingers on. During Mr. Butz's tenure there was an unending series of bureaucratic efforts to chip away at the effectiveness of food programs designed to help low-income people. The decision of the Administration to drop a special sample of 5,000 low-income families from the nationwide Household Food Consumption Survey next April is a continuation of that ignoble tradition.

The survey is designed to provide data on the nutritional habits of Americans and on trends in consumption patterns. Surveys have been conducted approximately every ten years since the mid-thirties, but the low-income family sampling would have been the first of its kind.

Considering the magnitude of America's food programs, the low-income aspect of the survey would have been an important innovation. Approximately 50 million Americans participate in food assistance programs for which the Government spends more than $8 billion annually. The results of the low-income sampling would have provided a data base for evaluating the effectiveness of those programs, for developing new nutritional policy for the nation and for modifying programs already in existence.

Just one example shows how wrong-headed the decision is. The food stamp program's nutritional design is based on information gathered in these surveys. By excluding the low-income part of the study, the Administration is depriving itself of exactly the information needed to perform that task.

The decision makes no sense unless it is the Administration's explicit policy to run inefficient food programs for poor people. Having dropped his Agriculture Secretary during the campaign, President Ford would do well now to reverse this decision, thereby removing one of the least attractive vestiges of that tenure.

Untapped Revenues

Despite New York's desperate need for new revenues to pay off noteholders and help eliminate a $500 million (or more) deficit in next year's budget, city officials once again have adamantly turned down a long-standing proposal to impose tolls on the East and Harlem River Bridges.

The tolls were initially suggested as a device to help curb motor vehicle congestion and air pollution in Manhattan. In fact, tolls are mandated under a locally developed plan to bring the city into compliance with the Federal Clean Air Act. The current administration in City Hall has, however, chosen to defy the Federal law and to ignore the environmental interests of a central city that is being choked to death by the world's heaviest concentration of motor vehicles.

Mayor Beame and his aides cannot continue much longer to sidestep the fiscal questions raised by their failure to tap a potentially lucrative revenue source or the question of equity posed by their obsessive protection of the minority of persons entering Manhattan toll-free each day—less than 10 percent of the total.

Estimates of revenues that might be derived from the Harlem and East River Bridges range up to $400 million, depending on the rate structure. Even modest tolls limited to peak hours could yield about $50 million a year, a revenue stream that would enable the city or the Municipal Assistance Corporation to sell up to $400 million in bonds to help pay noteholders.

Under present circumstances, there is no reason why motorists who insist on driving their private cars into Manhattan each day should get a free ride. Citizens for Clean Air recently conducted a serious study of the costs that these motorists inflict on the city and their fellow citizens—through pollution, traffic accidents, congestion and the valuable real estate taken up by streets and highways. The environmental group estimated that these hidden costs could reach $5 billion for the city as a whole, or almost $5 for each car entering Manhattan each day.

Urban motorists should start paying their way here, as drivers already are doing in some other cities, not only through the imposition of tolls on bridges that remain free but through other levies, such as heavier fees for parking on publicly owned and maintained streets or fees for entering areas of heaviest congestion.

Singapore has drastically cut congestion and has added more than $2 million yearly to municipal revenues by requiring cars entering a downtown restricted area during the morning rush hour to display a yellow sticker, costing $1.60 a day. It should be worth no less to drive into midtown Manhattan; New York certainly could use the revenues, as well as the relief from crippling traffic pollution.

Letters to the Editor

Subway System: To Destroy or to Save?

To the Editor:

If one were commissioned and paid to recommend the administrative steps necessary to destroy the New York City subway system over a period of time, here's one possible schedule: (1) Raise the fare; (2) reduce the number of riders; (3) cut the service frequency; (4) keep trains dirty, with malfunctioning lights and doors; (5) don't renovate stations.

And then, to be certain that even tourists and visitors have problems, keep the number of system maps to a minimum, make signs confusing and teach employees to be rude and unresponsive.

In order to confuse the populace still further, hire a chairman who is reputed to be a marketing expert (but works to reduce ridership) and a business manager (who reduces train service by 15 percent while boosting fares by 40 percent).

Sounds ridiculous, doesn't it? But just consider the shocking statistics that our subway system now serves 400 million fewer riders per year than 10 years ago, with 10 percent more workers.

Now, if one were paid to recommend steps to save the system, wouldn't they include the following? (1) Reduce the fare immediately even by as little as a nickel to show good faith; (2) increase the number of riders by giving discounts to off-peak-hour riders; (3) install token change machines that work and keep them in good order; (4) improve rush-hour service; (5) clean the cars, make certain that lights and doors work properly.

Also, (6) paint the stations and replace dingy lighting; (7) install better signs with some sense of good graphic design; (8) post readable maps in every car and in every station; (9) promote retail outlets in selected stations; some subway walking areas are the equivalent of enclosed suburban shopping malls; (10) encourage corporations to adopt a station or, at the very least, to contribute to station upgrading like the recent Exxon Corporation effort; (11) lobby for transfer of Westway funds for station renovation; (12) teach and train employees to realize that they serve the public and are paid by them.

Here's a program which could revive sagging New York spirits and uplift civic pride. What do you say, Messrs. Yonich and Guinan?

Imperiled Alligators

To the Editor:

Alligators which are being transplanted from areas in Louisiana where there is an alleged surplus to Arkansas are now looked upon by residents as potential eradicators of nuisance beavers and muskrats. The first time an alligator builds a nest on someone's property or eats a pet dog, or a female guarding her nest or young hisses at a passerby, the alligator, too, will become a nuisance.

Proposed Federal legislation will allow the destruction of nuisance alligators which may threaten or destroy life or property. This legislation is a guise for legalized hide-hunting for profit. As new regulations are imminent, the requests by Arkansas farmers appear suspect. Assuming the farmers are sincere in their desire for beaver and muskrat control, they may, through lack of understanding of alligator behavior patterns, destroy animals which they believe constitute threats—mistaking protection for avert threat, nesting for property destruction, etc.

All alligator transplants should cease until (1) a fair and enforceable protection policy based on knowledge of the animals' habits and behavior can be formulated and (2) local wildlife officials and residents can be educated as to the behavior of the alligator, so misinterpretations will not occur.

The alligator, when not harassed or disturbed, is not normally a threat to man. As long as local wildlife officials erroneously believe that "anything that moves is food to them," local residents cannot be expected to have any reasonable understanding of what does and what does not constitute a nuisance alligator—and the alligators requested today will be unwanted tomorrow.

Of Southern Support

To the Editor:

The president of a T.W.U. local wrote in a Nov. 19 letter about "right to work" laws that Mr. Carter should not worry about offending the business interests in the South since they aren't the people who elected him. Maybe so. But surely the South was the big factor, and it would not have grown so strongly from the ashes of the Civil War to its present economic power had it been unionized country. Southern labor knows this, as well as Mr. Carter.

'Why Can't Voters Be Electors?'

To the Editor:

How long must we continue to endure the Electoral College? Its potential for mischief and subversion of the democratic process has been set forth in countless studies and commentaries by political scientists and pundits, and I have yet to hear one sound or valid argument for its retention. What is the stumbling block in the way of direct popular election of the President and Vice President, such as we now have for just about all other elected offices?

At best, and in general practice, the 538 electors vote as automatons; the candidate who wins a popular plurality in New York State, for example, "automatically" scoops up New York's 41 electors when their votes are actually cast. But there is no constitutional or statutory requirement binding any state's electors to cast their votes with the popular choice of that state's voters, and as recently as 1968, for example, a few electors from a state which cast a clear plurality for Richard Nixon cast their votes for Senator Barry Goldwater, who was not even on the ballot and who received few, if any, popular votes.

In any case, why do 538 individuals need to be vested, even ceremonially, with the responsibility of "choosing" our President and Vice President? Why can't the seventy-odd million voters who go to the polls under, in most cases, the distinct impression that they are voting for the President and Vice President, be the actual electors of the candidates of their choice?

In the election just concluded, the Democratic ticket of Jimmy Carter and Walter Mondale won a popular majority nationwide—about 51 percent of the vote—and came out just about two million votes ahead of the Republican ticket of Gerald Ford and Robert Dole. It so happens that I voted for and favored the Democrats but that is beside the point—the principle would apply equally, and I would be equally in favor of it, if the result had gone the other way. Yet, if there had been a shift of a mere 12,000 votes in the states of Ohio and Mississippi the popular margins would stand approximately as they now are, but the Electoral College vote would have been 273 for Ford to 265 for Carter, a clear subversion of the popular will.

Many, if not most, of the Presidential electors themselves favor direct popular election of the President, and the abolition of their outmoded, anachronistic and anti-democratic institution.

Children and the State

To the Editor:

In his Nov. 27 letter, Dr. LeVine urges the creation of a U.S. office for children that would on their "rights and needs." The Salk believes the modern family unable to provide the physical, emotional security for children indicated by his advocacy of government intervention to cope with the "degradation of human values and ties."

Dr. Salk's concern for children's family is quite justified, but his proposal for government recognition of their needs is faulty for two reasons. First, there is no reason to believe that government intervention can solve the problems plague families and children. Second, Dr. Salk is asking to deal with human problems in a typically rationalist manner. But given the social variables man faces, the technique of rationalism does not always lend itself to easy resolution of the physical, emotional needs of individuals.

Dr. Salk has apparently overestimated the burgeoning process of social change that is manifesting throughout many neighborhoods. Rather than seeking more government urban and suburban growth, seeking to alleviate their pain within the social and cultural context of the community. There is hope of our children.

OPEC Oil Alternatives

To the Editor:

In John C. Sawhill's Nov. 17 article, "Facing Energy Reality," he mentions four programs to solve energy problems. The third is the development of synthetic oil. Herein lies a really successful alternative to our present dependence on OPEC nations for our energy.

Scientific American magazine published an article several months ago reviewing the present state of oil converting coal to oil. The technology, begun during World War II, has been improved to a point where coal can be converted to oil and gasoline and be competitive with present oil prices. New mining techniques have also made it possible to produce the raw material at the mine at low enough cost that gasoline could be refined at 30 cents a gallon.

Many coal-producing areas are economically depressed and would come a synthetic fuel industry would also help the economy by employment to our own people.

Producing synthetic petroleum is less risky than drilling for oil with the possibility of oceanic change in the political climate results in the loss of the drilling. The Federal Government should encourage synthetic oil production, tax breaks for investment and environmental problems. Economists would then be faced with competition which would reduce our imports but also prices low enough for poor nations to afford industrial development.

The Coal Company Director

To the Editor:

In his Nov. 17 Op-Ed piece on a national energy policy, John C. Sawhill is identified simply as "a coal, detached and academic objective title of president of York University" and as former director of the Federal Energy Administration. But there's more when Mr. Sawhill writes in his advocacy article that "mestic oil prices [were] held artificially low until after the election." He then goes on to say that "current policies to encourage development . . . increased oil production will not come until realistic pricing legislation erases the stultifyingly paralyzing production."

The "more" is that earlier this year Mr. Sawhill was named as a director of the North American Coal Corporation, a Cleveland-based coal producer. He is also a member of the Coal-Editor, Washington Post, Larchmont, N.Y., Nov. 18, 1976.

Of Retardation and Ballots

To the Editor:

In her Nov. 11 letter, Rosamond discusses the attitudes toward the mentally retarded. I find her rather distorted when she comes to the citizen's right to vote.

The individual she describes is totally retarded, living in a shelter home; he is looked after by other public expense; he could not cope with a doctor's questions about his health. If an individual is mentally retarded and if he has, for example, achieved the comprehension of a six-year-old, how can he be truly a valid, independent choice in the election process? Carried to a logical conclusion, all individuals over six years of age should also have the right to vote.

I would appreciate some information on whether the mentally retarded are permitted to vote. If they are, it is then the problem of their being manipulated by self-serving people. They can become a captive electorate and there are inherent dangers in this situation.

Great South Bay Patrols Pursue the Clam Pirates

By IVER PETERSON

BABYLON, LI.—With clam prices expected to rise after their usual slump, the clam pirates of the Great South Bay are coming out in force.

On daybreak the other day found Sgt. Hoffman of the Suffolk County Sheriff's Enforcement Squad crouched behind the wheel of his pickup.

When a Garvey—the flatbottom boats used by clam diggers—hove to 40 feet from the shore and its yellow-slickered pilot put out his long-digging tongs over the side.

Sergeant Hoffman grabbed his radio in "70 to 29," he said over the police frequency. "I got a Garvey and a yellow slicker, tongs in the water just off Louie's tree."

Louie was a legendary shellfish law enforcer, now no longer freezing behind the scrub pines that was his favorite cover while watching for clam poachers in the bay's "uncertified" waters.

Somewhere about four miles away, the 300-horsepower speedboat that Federal law enforcement officials recently gave the county police to enforce laws against clamming in waters closed by pollution roared into life.

The poacher—or pirate—worked with his back to the shore, thrusting and squeezing his tongs on the bay bottom. Sergeant Hoffman slumped deeper behind the wheel and prayed for the farthing wake of the police boat to appear before the pirate left.

The Pirate Skims Away But no such luck. After a few more jobs at the bottom, the pirate raised his tongs, started his motor and skimmed seaward in a shallow arc, moving beyond the white and yellow buoys that mark the line between the legal and illegal clam beds.

"That's the way it's been since we put the new boats in the water," Sergeant Hoffman shrugged. He straightened his back and shook the last cigarette from the pack.

"Now that they know we can outrun them they've been more careful, hitting us for a few minutes and not hanging around long enough to get caught."

The sigh he breathed seemed undecided between the benefit of the new boats as apparent deterrents to clam piracy, and the loss of sport, the high-speed chases and dramatic waterborne arrests, that has resulted from the new wariness of the pirates with the arrival of the new boats last month.

"Yeah, summonses and arrests have been down since we put the new boats in the water," Sergeant Hoffman said as he drove away towards his third cup of coffee of the morning.

There are 140,000 acres of legal clamming beds on Long Island, all but a few of them in Suffolk County and most of these on the county's South Shore. Seventeen thousand additional acres are under so-called "uncertified" waters—waters that by Federal hygiene standards have a bacterial coliform count too high to allow human foodstuffs to be taken from them.

Ironically, these uncertified waters close to shore are also the richest in clams and the easiest to work, and the clam diggers know it. Clams thrive in salt water washed by fresh water seeping from onshore, and the pollutants that these fresh waters bring with them nourish the clams into special abundance while disqualifying the water for clamming.

"If you spend a few hours in an uncertified area where you know the clamming is good," said Donald J. Middleton, State Department of Environmental Conservation director for the Long Island region, "you can do in two hours what it would take you two days to do out in a legitimate area. So you're talking about $200 or $300 for a couple of hours' work. It's no wonder that the guys go after them."

There are still more reasons for the temptations of clam piracy. One is that the number of state licensed clambers has doubled in the last five years, to slightly more than 10,000, while the annual take in hard-shell clams taken from the Suffolk County waters has remained about constant at about 4,100 tons a year.

At the dock, this take fetches the clambers $14 million a year and, according to Suffolk County Executive John V. N. Kleio, comprises more than 50 percent of the world's hard clam take. By the time the clams reach the tables of consumers, the value of the catch amounts to a $100 million industry.

The other reason for piracy is that no one involved in clamming—including Mr. Middleton—seems convinced that the Federal bacterial count limit of 70 coliform organisms per 100 milliliters of water is a valid test of the water's potential toxicity. Swimming, for example, is allowed in water with a coliform count of up to 2,400.

No illnesses Reported "Those standards have never been tested," Mr. Middleton said. "But we do know that thousands of bushels of illegal clams have entered the market and that no one has gotten sick from them."

The last case of hepatitis traced to a clam from Long Island was reported 13 years ago. "If we were to follow our own law to the letter we'd have to close 3,100 more acres right now, 1,400 of them in Babylon," Mr. Middleton added.

"There are 3,000 guys down there who are dependent for their living on clams in those waters, and we'd be risking their livelihoods for a standard that since the 1930's has never been tested for legitimacy."

The digger who was unloading his catch in Brightwaters the other day admitted to having raked in "the uncertified" at times, although when asked his name, he clammed up. "I eat 'em," he said, "I feed 'em to my family, and law, he said, "is just there to keep the cops busy."

Francis T. P. Plimpton ushers Mayor Leopold Gratz of Vienna into Mayor Beame's office, top, introduces them to each other, cooler, and escorts the Austrian visitor out. It's all in a day's work for the former diplomat.

For Francis Plimpton, A City Greeter's Job Can Be Labor of Love

By JUDY KLEMESRUD

A black Cadillac limousine pulled up in front of City Hall at 3:15 P.M. yesterday, and a tall, lean, distinguished-looking man wearing silver wire-rimmed spectacles emerged.

Francis T. P. Plimpton, the city's official greeter, was on the job again. It was not a long wait. Leopold Gratz, Mayor of Vienna, arrived a bit early in a spiffy camel-colored coat for his 3:30 appointment with Mayor Beame.

Then the city's greeter ushered Mayor Gratz into Mayor Beame's inner sanctum, where the two Mayors chatted amiably in front of the fireplace, with Mr. Plimpton standing to Mayor Gratz's right. The city's greeter looked very proper in a three-piece charcoal gray wool suit with faint pinstripes, a white button down shirt, and a red-and-navy-blue striped tie.

"Mayor Gratz, I think these two cities have something in common," Mr. Plimpton, who will be 78 years old next Tuesday, said in his clear patrician tones. "You are the musical capital of Europe. The Vienna Philharmonic is almost as good as the New York Philharmonic."

Everybody laughed. Mr. Plimpton oozed further that the two city's museums and operas were comparable, but that New York had no equivalent to Vienna's sacher torte.

Francis T. P. Plimpton, the city's official greeter, is shown in a portrait. He is a tall, lean man wearing silver wire-rimmed spectacles.

Smiles. Proclamations. An exchange of gifts. Thank yous. More small talk. Warm goodbyes. The whole thing was over in 10 minutes, and then Mr. Plimpton climbed into his limousine and headed uptown.

Mr. Plimpton, who is probably best known to the public as a former deputy United States representative to the United Nations under his old law-school roommate, Adlai E. Stevenson, and as the father of George Plimpton, the writer and professional amateur, is the sixth man in the city's history to serve as official greeter.

And like several of his predecessors, he comes from a socially prominent background. The scion of an eminent Massachusetts family, his schools include Phillips Exeter Academy, Amherst and Harvard Law, and his clubs include the Century, River, Union and Brook.

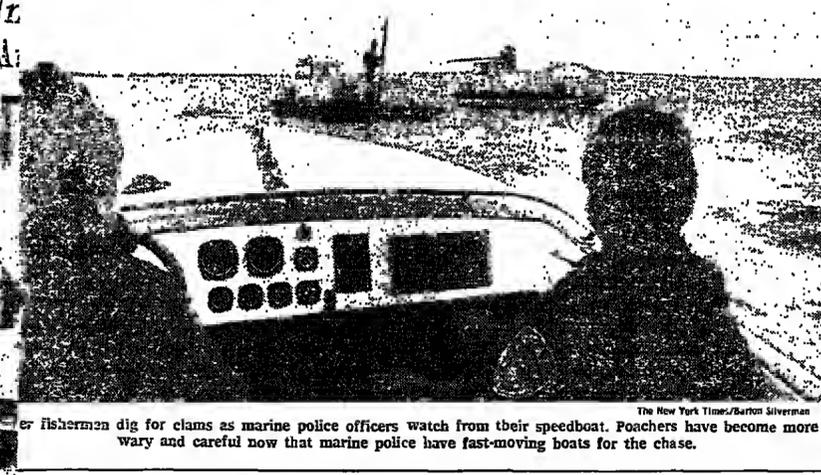

Magazine articles have in the past referred to Mr. Plimpton as "the quintessential WASP," a description that draws neither a smile nor a wince.

"One thing people don't realize is that we WASPs are one of the most downtrodden minorities in the city," he said evenly.

Mr. Plimpton's official title is head of the city's Commission for Distinguished Guests, and he serves for an unpaid $1 a year.

"I haven't any idea why I took this job," he said the other day in his law office, Debevoise, Plimpton, Lyons & Gates, on the 33d floor of 239 Park Avenue. "But I remembered from my diplomatic post that meeting foreign dignitaries is a lot of fun."

President-elect Carter, responding to a bid of cooperation recently made by Adlai I. Brezhnev, said that he would negotiate "aggressively" to get the dead-end negotiations for a strategic arms agreement treaty "off dead center."

Two major Cabinet posts in the Carter Administration have been filled with the appointment of Cyrus R. Vance as a New York lawyer, as Secretary of State, and Thomas B. Lance, a Georgia banker, as director of the Office of Management and Budget.

A Philippines bill will get $1 billion in economic and military aid over the next five years from the United States in return for the continued use of military bases there.

Three times in Britain have forced the closing of the hot mineral springs baths at gave the city of Bath its name.

Unemployment in the United States rose to 8.1 percent in November, the highest level this year, despite an apparent substantial increase in the number of employed people.

Gary Mark Gilmore's execution by a firing squad Monday has indefinitely been postponed by the United States Supreme Court, which wants more time to consider his case.

Stock prices were up, reflecting new optimism on Wall Street. Advancing issues outnumbered declining ones by 2-to-1, doing even better than the Dow Jones industrial average, which was up 2.91 points to 930.55.

Wage-and-price control authority will not be sought from Congress by Jimmy Carter, who took a 180-degree turn from the position he maintained in his campaign. He always had said he needed the standby authority. Mr. Carter, at a televised news conference, explained that he would not seek the authority because anticipation of controls was causing companies to raise prices now.

Bids will be taken this month for the tearing down of a section of the West Side Highway from Jane Street to 14th Street in Greenwich Village, an announcement by Mayor Beame and Governor Carey said. A later contract will be awarded next spring, they said, for the demolition of an additional section of the highway from 14th to 26th Street. Both sections were described as "a serious safety hazard."

A low of 8 degrees in New York City at 3:30 A.M. was reported by the National Weather Service, the coldest Dec. 3 in the city on record. Stalled cars in the area might also have set a new record for the day.

Two apparent tampering efforts cited in Mandel case. Fiscally straitened city awaits Carter inauguration.

World News Briefs Many in Geneva believe U.S. must take role in Rhodesia conference. U.N. group votes to ban environmental manipulation. Europeans pleased by choice of Vance. Lance says he'll sell Georgia bank holdings.

Business/Finance New-car sales were up 20.8 percent in the final third of November, compared with the similar period last year. The annual sales rate of new cars in November rose to 8.2 million from 7.3 million in October. November sales would have been up 500,000 more if there had not been a strike at the Ford Motor Company, analysts said.

Sales in New York City's major stores in November showed only an average increase of 1.9 percent over those of November 1975. The highest monthly increase of the year was in October. One reason for November's relatively poor showing was said to be two fewer shopping days in the period covered by the sales report.

Stock prices were up, reflecting new optimism on Wall Street. Advancing issues outnumbered declining ones by 2-to-1, doing even better than the Dow Jones industrial average, which was up 2.91 points to 930.55.

DEMOLITION BIDS SET FOR WEST SIDE ROAD

Carey-Beame Disclosure of Step Involving Stretch in the 'Village' Heats Up Westway Dispute

By EDWARD C. BURKS
Governor Carey and Mayor Beame announced yesterday that bids would be sought for the tearing down of a dilapidated section of the elevated West Side Highway between Jane and 14th Streets in Greenwich Village.

The announcement immediately added heat to the battle over the city-state plan to build the Westway, a $1.156 billion six-lane, truck-carrying Interstate System highway, to supplant the old West Side Highway between the Battery and 42d Street.

Pressure Tactics Charged
The West Side Ad Hoc Committee, a coalition of individuals and about 30 community groups opposed to a super-road on the West Side, contends that demolition is "a pressure tactic to eventually force Westway upon the communities."

Mr. Coleman, in a recent letter to Representative Bella S. Abzug, Democrat of Manhattan, who also opposes the Westway, said: "The condition of the structure [from Jane to 26th] is a safety hazard to vehicles and pedestrians which pass under it."

He added that demolition of a section did not mandate construction of the Westway since one alternative called for reconstructing the old elevated highway.

The city-state announcement yesterday said that West Street underneath the elevated structure would be channelized with a concrete median strip and paint stripes after demolition to accommodate four traffic lanes.

The Federal Government will pay 90 percent of the estimated $10 million construction cost of the West Side Highway already closed to traffic south of 46th Street.

At an all-day hearing conducted yesterday by the City Club of New York, a private good-government organization opposed to the super-road, there was disagreement among experts on how long it would take to build the Westway.

Opponents have argued that the West Side of New York would be tied up for 10 years.

William Finerman, general manager of the General Contractors Association, representing the heavy-construction industry, and John Saunders, president of Slatery Associates, major builder of numerous subway, building and highway projects here, said that the Westway could be completed five years after Federal approval was given.

They spoke of "fast-track" construction involving accelerated design work and around-the-clock work shifts.

But Lowell K. Bridwell, executive director of the city-state group that planned the Westway, stuck to his estimate: 18 months of detailed design work before award of the first major construction contracts and six to seven years of actual construction.

He said that night work would raise costs and added that anti-noise regulations would no doubt rule out such work anyway.

As for those who want to "junk Westway" and take mass-transit aid instead, Mr. Bridwell said both the highway and transit projects were needed. He noted that the city would receive $100 million for the Westway right of way and could then use that sum to apply for four times as much Federal transit aid under current 80-to-20 Federal-local financing formula.

Dorothy Ainsworth, 82, Authority On Physical Education for Women

By WERNER BAMBERGER
Dorothy Sears Ainsworth, an internationally known authority on physical education for women, died Thursday at a Moline, Ill., nursing home. She was 82 years old and until recently was a resident of Northampton, Mass.

Miss Ainsworth retired in 1960 as professor and director of physical education at Smith College, her alma mater. Discussing her field of endeavor almost 40 years ago, she said:

"The ultimate aim of physical education is to make such contribution through the education and development of the student as to enable her to live a richer, more abundant life, to meet the problems of the age in which she lives and to render service to others."

After her graduation from Smith in 1918 she earned a master's degree and a doctorate at Columbia University Teachers College. She went to Smith in 1921 as an instructor in hygiene and physical education.

Brief Interval at Skidmore
She held a similar position at Skidmore College in 1925 and 1926 and went back to Smith that year to become professor and director of physical education, a post she held until her retirement in 1960.

In her early years at Smith Miss Ainsworth taught modern dance and coached the basketball team.

She remained active after her retirement as a consultant to the American Association for Health, Physical Education and Recreation, which, in 1960, awarded her the Luther A. Gulick Medal. In 1962 she received the highest award of the American Academy of Physical Education, the Hetherington Award.

Internationally, she was the organizing chairman for the first International Congress on Physical Education and Sports for Girls and Women, held at Copenhagen, in 1949.

In 1950-57 she was chairman of the United States Joint Council on International Affairs in Health, Physical Education and Recreation. In 1958 she was chairman of the committee on physical education of the World Confederation of Organizations of the Teaching Profession, and in 1950-56 she served as a member of the United States committee of the Pan American Institute of Physical Education.

Among the foreign honors she received were a medal of honor from the French Ministry of Education; France also made her a commander of the Order of Merite Sportif; the Cross of Honor from the Government of Finland, and the Ling Medal of Sweden's Ling Gymnastic Association.

She also wrote widely on physical education and was the author of "History of Physical Education in 12 Colleges for Women," published in 1930, and the co-author, with Ruth Evans, of "Basic Rhythms," published in 1955. She also edited another book in 1955, "Individual Sports for Women."

Miss Ainsworth held a number of memberships in professional organizations, among them the National Association of Physical Education College Women, the National Council of Women in the U.S.A., and the International Association of Physical Education and Sports Women. She was also a fellow of the American College of Sports Medicine and the American Academy for Physical Education.

She is survived by a sister, Mrs. Harry Getz.

Funeral services will be held at 2 P.M. today at the First Congregational Church in Moline.

Leigh Danenberg Is Dead at 83; Retired Connecticut Publisher
Leigh Danenberg, a retired newspaper publisher, died yesterday at his Westport, Conn., home. He was 83 years old.

Mr. Danenberg, a graduate of New York University and Columbia University, had been the owner of The South Norwalk Sentinel, a daily, and of The Bridgeport Sunday Herald. Both papers are now defunct.

In 1933 he became editor of the Tonnepah Times-Bonanza. Later he was editor of the Las Vegas Review-Journal. In 1950 he founded the Las Vegas Sun, of which he was vice president until he died.

Mr. Germain helped transform the old Nevada Southern College into the present U.N.L.V. He served on the Board of Regents in 1958-1964. In 1961 he was appointed assistant regional director of the Pequot Library in Southport, Conn., and a governor of the Bach Festival of Bethleham, Pa.

Charles D. Coxe, a metallurgical engineer, died Thursday at his Fairfield, Conn., home. He was 68 years old.

Mr. Coxe, a graduate of Lehigh University, who held 20 patents on precious metals alloys, retired last year as a vice president of Handy & Harman, precious metals refiners. He was trustee of the Pequot Library in Southport, Conn., and a governor of the Bach Festival of Bethleham, Pa.

Yukobovsky Is Buried in Moscow; Soviet Leaders Honor Marshal
MOSCOW, Dec. 3 (UPI)—The Soviet Union gave a hero's burial today to Marshal Ivan I. Yukobovsky, commander of Warsaw Pact forces.

Leonid I. Brezhnev, the Communist Party leader; President Nikolai V. Podgorny, Defense Minister Dmitry F. Ustinov and Mikhail A. Suslov, a Politburo member, helped carry the marshal's ashes to burial in the Kremlin wall.

The official press agency Tass said Prime Minister Alexsei N. Kosygin also attended the hour-long ceremony in freezing temperatures but he was missing from a televised view of the leadership standing on the Lenin Mausoleum and West-entrers in Red Square did not see him.

Mr. Kosygin reportedly suffered a heart attack last summer and resumed work only in October.

ADM. ANGELO JACHINO
ROME, Dec. 3 (UPI)—Adm. Angelo Jachino, who commanded Italy's naval forces in the early years of World War II, died yesterday, relatives announced today. He was 87 years old.

Admiral Jachino was chief of naval operations from 1940 until 1943. He led Italian forces in the 1941 battle against the British off Cape Matapan, Greece, in which Italy lost three cruisers.

For Francis Plimpton, City Job As Greeter Proves Labor of Love
Plimpton said with a faraway smile. "The job was far more romantic in those days. Big ocean liners would come into New York, and Grover would go out in a tugboat and climb up the ropes."

Would Mr. Plimpton like to make an equally big splash as city greeter? "Oh, no," he replied, in his reticent, serious manner. "I'm a quiet and retiring middle-aged, if not elderly, gentleman, and I don't want to make a splash. You don't have to make a splash to have fun."

Glancing out over a glorious view of the East River, Mr. Plimpton said that there were a few drawbacks with what seems on the surface like a terribly glamorous job.

"Let's face it, the supply of distinguished guests is limited," he said. "Maybe we'll get more after Carter becomes President. And while it's very pleasant to spend half an hour with the Duke of Gloucester, who is a very pleasant fellow, by the way, you don't get to be a bosom friend of anybody."

Mr. Plimpton, who lives at 131 East 60th Street with his wife of 50 years, the former Pauline Ames, holds another unpaid municipal job, chairman of the Board of Ethics of the City of New York. The board meets approximately one morning a week in his law office to consider possible conflicts of interest on the part of city employees.

When asked why he seemed to be stepping up rather than slowing down his activities as his 78th birthday approached, Mr. Plimpton replied: "I just don't seem to be able to say no. Besides, they all seem to be sort of fun. Life isn't a series of things that you let pass by. If you get the chance to do something challenging, for God's sakes, don't let it pass by. Do it!"

Perhaps the best known of Mr. Plimpton's predecessors was the flamboyant Grover A. Whalen, who was official greeter from 1918 to 1953, and who established the ticker-tape blizzard as a symbol of New York's welcome to the great and the good.

He was followed by Richard C. Patterson, who served from 1954 to 1966; Bud Palmer, from 1966 to 1973; Walter J. P. Curley, from April to December 1973, and Angier Biddle Duke, from 1974 to last August.

"I remember Grover Whalen as a fabulous fixture of New York," Mr.

Dr. Erwin Schwenk Dies; Headed Early Research On the Steroid Hormones

Special to The New York Times
PRINCETON, N.J., Dec. 3—Dr. Erwin Schwenk, former research director of the Schering Corporation of Bloomfield, N.J., and a contributor to early chemical research on steroid hormones, died Wednesday at the Princeton Medical Center. He was 88 years old and lived in Princeton.

Dr. Schwenk conducted research on sex hormones, cortisone, penicillin, cholesterol and cancer. He was born in Prague and educated at the Institute of Technology in Vienna and at the University of Erlangen in Germany.

Dr. Schwenk, who came to the United States in 1934, set up the Schering Corporation's pharmaceutical laboratory in Schering, N.J., in 1937. After retiring, he became a research fellow for the Worcester Foundation for experimental biology in Worcester, Mass.

Dr. Schwenk was a fellow of the New York Academy of Sciences and a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Surviving are his wife, the former Dr. Rascha Shapiro; a daughter, Dr. Lily Schwenk Haring, the wife of Dr. D. F. Haring, the former president of Brown University; a sister, Edith Schwenk, and a brother, Walter Schwenk, both of New York; four grandchildren, and two great grandchildren.

JACQUES CARLU, ARCHITECT, IS DEAD IN PARIS AT 86

PARIS, Dec. 3 (AP)—Jacques Carlu, the architect, who designed famous buildings in several countries, died today. He was 86.

Mr. Carlu designed the Palais de Chaillot in Paris and was conservator of the building across the river from the Eiffel Tower from 1937 to 1938.

He also designed the building used as headquarters for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization in Paris until the alliance was ordered out of France by Charles de Gaulle.

Mr. Carlu designed buildings in New York, Toronto and Montreal as well as an extension of the United Nations headquarters in Geneva.

He was a professor of architecture at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology from 1924 to 1934 and later was director of the American School of Beaux Arts at Fontainebleau.

VICE ADM. SIR MICHAEL FELL

LONDON, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Vice Adm. Sir Michael Fell, one of the Royal Navy's most distinguished fighter pilots, died last night at his home in the south of England. He was 58 years old.

The much-decorated vice admiral saw service in the Mediterranean and the North Sea during World War II. He was especially commended for a daring raid on the German battleship Tirpitz in April 1944.

JAMES POLITIS, 55, FLUTE WITH METROPOLITAN OPERA

James D. Politis, who played flute with the Metropolitan Opera orchestra for the last 25 years, died on Thursday at Lenox Hill Hospital. He was 55 years old and lived at 1 Lincoln Pl.

Mr. Politis, who was educated at the University of Miami and Vanderbilt University, served with Army intelligence units in the Philippines in World War II.

After the war, he continued his music studies with John Wummer, principal flutist for the New York Philharmonic.

He also played under such well-known conductors as Arturo Toscanini, Walter F. Susskind, George Szell, Dimitri Mitropoulos.

Besides being an accomplished pianist, he was also a bit of a wit. On one occasion, he was asked who was his favorite cat. He replied, "This is just like asking me to name his favorite cat."

He is survived by his wife, the former Rosemarie Tigner, five children by a previous marriage, Barbara Hartwell, Theodore, Alexander and Andrew Politis, his mother, a brother, three sisters and a grandchild.

DR. HERMANN POERZGEN

MOSCOW, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Dr. Hermann Poerzgen, West German dean of foreign press corps in Moscow, who reported from the Soviet Union in 1957, died today at the age of 71.

Dr. Poerzgen suffered a heart attack earlier this week and was taken to a city hospital. He was found dead there early today.

He first came to the Soviet Union correspondent in 1937, representing Frankfurter Zeitung. After World War he returned to Moscow.

Dr. Poerzgen wrote several books on his experiences in the Soviet Union, he was planning to retire next autumn and concentrate on his memoirs.

Angry Police Reject Re-hiring Offer

Most at Boisterous Meeting Reject New York City Corrections Posts as Others Delay Decision

By LENA WILLIAMS

About 200 New York City police officers, angry and boisterous at times, yesterday turned down, or delayed their response to, offers from the city to rehire them as correction officers.

They now face the possibility of having their names removed from the preferred list for re-hiring as police officers. However, they had accepted the jobs as officers in the city's detention prisons, and would have waived their rights to appointment as policemen.

"You're damned if you do and damned if you don't," said both Paul Kawas and Tom Gentile, who are stationed at the 77th Precinct in Brooklyn. And both added: "It's a Catch-22 situation."

Their sentiments were echoed by several other officers who jammed a smoke-filled auditorium at the Police Academy, 1235 East 20th Street yesterday, for briefing on the job offers by personnel at the Police Department and the New York City Department of Corrections.

Arnelius J. Behan, head of personnel at the Police Department, told the officers that "the city's position has been delayed attention to the rights of its laid-off members."

Interrupted by Heckling

Behan's statement, however, was interrupted by heckling from many of the officers, who had been informed by letter that they could be rehired to the preferred list by applying to the City Personnel Department with a letter detailing the justification for refusing the job.

Yesterday, Police Commissioner Michael J. Codd called upon the New York State Legislature to change the law, saying that "men who were supposed to be rehired by that law" ended up being laid off.

Although their present salary, seniority and pension rights as correction officers are comparable to those of policemen, they were concerned about the danger of being locked up for eight hours a day some of the same people they had put behind bars.

Questions About Situation

"The only things you can take inside the cell are a set of keys and a whistle," Officer Kawas, who has been on the job for three years, said and delayed his decision to attend yesterday's briefing. "Can you do with a whistle if some cop decides to attack you?"

Among the officers present at the briefing, 22 declined the jobs, one accepted, and 15 delayed their decision until Monday.

Officer Bruce Cechel's letter to Mayor John V. Lindsay, who is the City's Personnel Director, says: "To ask me to give up my career in the Police Department and ask me to give up a dream and

The coldest weather of the already-wintery season swept into New York yesterday as the city registered a shivering low temperature of 9 degrees. Those New Yorkers with headgear may have felt the cold a bit less.

9-Degree Chill Is a Dec. 3 Record

The following article was published in The New York Times on Dec. 4, 1940:

Winds of near-gale force swirled into the city yesterday from the north and northwest, bringing with them the coldest weather of the season and driving the mercury down to 10 degrees, the lowest temperature ever recorded here for the date.

The low mark, which was reached at last midnight, ended a 24-hour period during which the temperature never went above the freezing point, and was 9 degrees less than the previous low for the month, established on Monday.

The cold weather will begin leaving the city today and head for points as far south as Miami, according to the local Weather Bureau.

By tomorrow, the Weather Bureau said, temperatures here should be close to normal again for the first time in four days.

In Riverhead, L. I., the Long Island Cautiflowers Association reported that the cold had ruined the last few thousand crates of cauliflower of a total crop of nearly 1.5 million crates.

There was no report on lost cauliflowers yesterday, but the weather report was essentially the same. The National Weather Service reported a low of 9 degrees in the city at 3:30 A.M., the coldest Dec. 3 on record.

New York area motorists also set a new record for Dec. 3, according to the Automobile Club of New York. A spokesman for the group said that more cars were stranded on the date than in any early December day in memory.

SUSPECT IS INDICTED IN WESTCHESTER RAPE

Nursing Student Charged in Case Involving 2 Mamaroneck Girls

By JAMES FERON

Special to The New York Times

WHITE PLAINS, Dec. 3—Alexander J. Verrone, the 27-year-old nursing student who was seized Tuesday as a suspect in sexual crimes against young girls in Westchester County, was indicted today by a grand jury on 16 counts of rape, sodomy and assault.

Thomas A. Facelle, the county's chief assistant district attorney, said the indictment involves an incident on July 28 in Mamaroneck, when two girls, 12 and 18 years old, were attacked by a man posing as a taxi driver. He lured the younger into the vehicle and raped her, Mr. Facelle said, and then picked up the teenager. When he tried to beat her, she grabbed his knife and ran off. The younger girl escaped at the same time, Mr. Facelle said.

The police believed at the time that he was the same man who had sexually assaulted at least five Westchester girls. The attacks continued as parents, school officials and police departments throughout the county took measures to protect children.

Mr. Verrone was picked up this week by Yonkers policemen after they spotted stolen license plates on a car Mr. Verrone was allegedly driving. The suspect sped away, the police reported, and was captured after a brief chase. At least four victims of the series of sexual assaults identified him that night.

Suspect in Nursing Course

Mr. Facelle said that the balding student, who was attending Herbert Lehman College in the Bronx as one of the few males in a junior-level nursing program, could receive sentences of up to 25 years in state prison for each of the major crimes listed in the indictment.

Mr. Verrone was arraigned this afternoon before Judge John C. Couzens in County Court. He was represented by a Legal Aid Society attorney who was granted an adjournment until Monday morning. The suspect remained in county jail without bail.

The Sheriff's Department said earlier in the day that it had a photograph of the rape suspect three months ago, but that he appeared beardless and 30 pounds lighter at the time.

Lieut. Carol Kope, head of the sheriff's sex crimes squad, said the young man, now only 3 years old, "never flinched" when they were shown Mr. Verrone's earlier picture with hundreds of others.

Mr. Verrone was wearing a toupee attached by four or five snaps sutured to his scalp when he was arrested in Yonkers. "It seemed to be a matter of vanity, rather than a disguise," Lieutenant Kope said, "but it added to the different appearance."

The earlier photograph had been obtained from the police in Bronxville, where Mr. Verrone had been arrested three years earlier and charged with attempting to assault a 16-year-old girl with a knife. A grand jury declined then to indict him.

Looking for Wrong Crimes

Detectives who had reviewed six years worth of Bronxville police files as part of a countywide search, also failed to spot Mr. Verrone, Lieutenant Kope said, because they were looking for sexual crimes, while the Bronxville case involved assault only.

The photograph was later turned over to the sheriff's department as part of what Mr. Facelle called a "second level" of investigation. Lieutenant Kope said that "we had nearly 300 suspects during the child rape investigations," referring to the initial stage.

Police officials also said that the ability of the 18-year-old girl in the Mamaroneck incident to climb right over the guy and grab his knife "set the pattern of 'someone intimidated by older women' and not that of the attempted assault in Bronxville."

Confusion over identification of the suspect's vehicle added to the investigation problems, the police said. They said it eventually appeared that he used three cars, two of them said to be owned by the suspect and his wife and the third, the most precisely identified, owned by a relative.

A police official also said that dealing with child witnesses who are also the victims of sexual crimes is a "more sensitive than usual." Some of the girls who were asked to pick their assailant out of a Yonkers lineup this week "were afraid that they could be seen through one-way mirrors," an officer said, adding, "I guess we should have demonstrated the one-way nature of the glass before we began the line-up."

A spokesman for Herbert Lehman College said that Mr. Verrone was a student in good standing who had transferred to Lehman from other schools, including a community college, and that he was a good student, although not of "A" level, with no record of problems.

$500,000 for a Fall

A settlement of $500,000 was awarded to a $140-a-week laborer, who plunged 30 feet when planking gave way as he was working on the construction of the World Trade Center. The laborer, Domenico Delicarpini, who was 30 years old when the accident occurred on May 15, 1969, has been incapacitated since. According to his attorney, he will never be able to work again. Mr. Delicarpini landed on his head, injured his spinal cord and fractured his neck. The settlement in State Supreme Court in the Bronx involved the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, the Tishman Construction Company and two subcontractors. Mr. Delicarpini is married and the father of four children.

Youth Indicted in Killing

Christopher J. Doran, an 18-year-old high school senior from Massapequa Park, L.I., was indicted by a Nassau County grand jury on charges of criminally negligent homicide, reckless endangerment, unauthorized use of a motor vehicle, resisting arrest and criminal possession of a controlled substance. The charges stem from the death of George F. Kempen, a Nassau County police officer, at the hands of Richard Kash, a Long Island State Parkway police officer, in Merrick on Nov. 14. It is alleged that Mr. Doran caused Police Officer Kash's gun to discharge while resisting arrest after an automobile chase. The bullet struck Police Officer Kempen.

5th Dies After Explosion

The explosion of the Chieftan chewing gum factory took its fifth victim when a 28-year-old Queens man died in a Pennsylvania burn center. His wife, also a victim of the fire, had died earlier. The new victim, Jose Murray, died at the Crozer-Chester hospital in Chester, Pa., where his wife, Inez, 29, succumbed on Monday. They left two infant girls, aged 1 and 3. The blast at the American Chicle Company plant in Queens on Nov. 1 left 55 persons injured. Authorities have attributed the explosion to the ignition of a lubricant dust by a mechanical or electrical spark.

Thruway Pact Spurned

Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway employees narrowly rejected a proposed three-year contract offer from the state. Under guidelines set up by the Civil Service Employees Association, which counted all ballots out received as being in favor of the contract, the proposed pact was defeated 738 to 735. Roger Cole, a spokesman for the union, said the actual count of ballots received in the mail poll showed a more than 6-to-2 rejection of the proposed contract with 728 opposed and 241 in favor of the pact. Mr. Cole said union officials had scheduled an emergency meeting Monday morning in Albany to evaluate the results of the voting.

OTB Security Tightened

To give added protection to employees of the Offtrack Betting Corporation and to discourage robbery attempts, time locks have been installed in all 156 OTB branch offices. Paul R. Scovrone, OTB chairman and president, said that the time locks would be set so that branch-office vaults could not be opened "from some time before closing in the evening until some time after opening the following day." He said that the vaults also were equipped with alarms. Signs have been posted in all branch offices calling attention to the time-lock installations, he added.

Food Cart Blast Hurts 2

A police officer and a civilian were slightly injured in the explosion of a small propane cylinder on a food vending cart parked at 41 Kenmare Street, in lower Manhattan. The police said the civilian had been injured by debris from the explosion. The officer, who rushed from his post as a school crossing guard, was felled by gas fumes. Both were taken to Bellevue Hospital, where they were listed in good condition.

5 Held in Meat Theft

NEWARK, Dec. 3 (AP)—Five men have been indicted on Federal charges of stealing 900 cartons of meat, valued at $50,000, from a trailer here. John Bowens, an assistant United States attorney, said the five had been charged with stealing the meat on Feb. 8, 1974, from Roger's Transfer, a Newark shipping company. Named in the indictment were Norman Kahn, 49 years old, of Hillside; Stephen Rizzo, 47, of Mountainside; Thomas Catanzaro, 28, of Montville; James Muccia, 34, of Livingston; and James Taylor, 29, of Lake Hiawatha.

Golden Quits City Council to Seek Borough Presidency in Brooklyn

By EDWARD RANZAL

Howard Golden resigned from the New York City Council today to "devote all of my efforts" to win the Democratic nomination next year for a full four-year term as Borough President of Brooklyn.

Mr. Golden, who heads the Roosevelt Democratic Club and had represented the Borough Park section of Brooklyn for almost seven years, is expected to be elected shortly by the 13-member Brooklyn Council delegation to a one-year interim term to complete the term of Sebastian Leone, the current Borough President, who was elected last month to State Supreme Court.

Mr. Leone, who will resign as Borough President on Dec. 31, will then be sworn in as a justice of the Supreme Court. Mr. Golden's Council seat will be filled by a vote of the entire Council after the Brooklyn Democratic organization had recommended a successor.

Some City Hall observers were perplexed by Mr. Golden's decision to resign from the Council at this time. Close associates explained that he wanted to avoid any implication of a political deal as well as to head off any prospective candidates.

Blacks Seek Deputy Post

Meanwhile, an organization of black Democratic district leaders in Brooklyn, headed by Assemblyman Thomas R. Fortune, said they had obtained a commitment from Meade H. Esposito, the Brooklyn Democratic chairman, that the next appointed deputy borough president would be a black.

Councilman Samuel Wright, a member of the organization, said that Mr. Esposito wanted blacks to become more in-

Newly Ordained in Catskills Seek Tax Cut

Special to The New York Times

HARDENBURGH, N.Y., Dec. 3—The residents of this small community in the Catskill Mountains who became ordained last September to protest rising property taxes are planning to take the final step toward tax exemption tomorrow by presenting formal applications to the town Assessor.

Last September, more than half of the town's 238 residents were ordained as ministers of the Universal Life Church in a ceremony at the local community hall. The ordination was performed by George McLain, a 41-year-old plumber from the nearby village of Liberty.

Mr. McLain was then a bishop in the church, a California-based organization that offers divinity degrees by mail. But in a telephone conversation today, Mr. McLain said he had recently been given the title of First Cardinal of New York by the church's president, Kirby J. Hensley.

Last September's ceremony, Mr. McLain ordained 164 residents, almost all of the adult population of Hardenburgh. A lawyer for the residents, Stephen Oppenheim, said today that the ordained members were prepared to present the assessor with applications for tax exemptions, copies of their deeds and signed covenants stating that they have formed churches.

Families or groups of individuals, he said, may legally form their own churches by banding together and saying, "We are a church." They must also agree to meet regularly in the premises "for divine worship or religious observance," he added.

Because of the influx of other tax-exempt organizations in the Catskill area, property taxes for residents have risen so high that some people in Hardenburgh must pay as much as one-half to two-thirds of their incomes in school, town and county taxes, according to the Town Supervisor, Lester Bourke. Most of them work as loggers, laborers or subsistence farmers and earn an average income of $6,000 to $7,000 a year, he said.

As a result, many farmers have been threatened with the loss of their homes and land, which, in most cases, has been farmed by several generations of one family.

The tax-exempt landowners in Hardenburgh include the Nassau County Boy Scouts, the Catskill Center for Conservation and groups of Zen Buddhists and Tibetan monks. Their property represents a value of $5.1 million out of a total assessed value in one school district of $11 million, Mr. Bourke said.

Some Catskill-area lawmakers have introduced legislation to correct inequities in real-property tax laws, but, Mr. Bourke said, "I don't see the elected representatives doing anything they don't absolutely have to do unless they're pushed into it, and that's what we're trying to do."

He said he was not at odds with the tax-exempt organizations who have taken advantage of the law in Hardenburgh. "It's the law that's wrong," he said.

The tax-protest ordinations have spread to several other Catskill Mountain towns. Soon after the Hardenburgh ceremony, Mr. McLain ordained 200 residents of nearby Livingston Manor, who say they will present their own tax-exemption applications to the Town Assessor in a few weeks.

And last night in the Marbletown Sportsmen's Club, 35 residents of that tiny Ulster County community were ordained. Mr. McLain says he has performed more than 3,000 ordinations, including 1,027 two months ago in Center Moriches, L.I.

Large Number of Crime Suspects Knew Their Victims, Study Shows

By TOM GOLDSTEIN

A "startling" percentage of persons arrested for serious crimes in New York City had "prior, often close" relations with their victims, according to a study that the Vera Institute of Justice will publish shortly.

"Prior relationships were frequent in cases of homicide and assault, where they were expected, as well as in cases of robbery, where they were not," the study found. In its sample, more than half of those arrested in cases of "interpersonal violence" had known their victims. "Even in property crimes," the study reported, "prior relationships figured in over a third of the cases."

Without specifically saying so, the report confirms a basic truism of law enforcement work: It is easier to apprehend a suspect when the victim previously knew him and can identify him.

Based on an analysis of the data they collected, Vera researchers speculated that people arrested on felony charges and processed through the criminal-justice system were not "representative" of those who commit felonies. Crimes that carry a sentence of more than a year in prison, this speculation led to the report's hypothesis that "the criminal-justice system is just not catching in its net the kind of criminals citizens worry about—the violent strangers."

Typically, the report found that suspects were not strangers to the victims. They were husbands or wives, lovers, prostitutes or their pimp and customers, neighbors, in-laws, narcotics addicts or dealers, landlords or tenants.

Once a suspect was arrested, the study found that the defendant and victim often became reconciled, leading the victim to drop the charges or to become an uncooperative witness.

This, then, helped to explain why criminal charges were so often dismissed or reduced in severity—twice phenomena that have never been adequately explained by crime and court researchers.

Another major finding of the study was that "defendants with heavier criminal histories were more likely to be convicted and, if convicted, more likely to receive heavier sentences than those with light or clean records."

By and large, the report concluded, "the dispositions appear rational and proportional to the seriousness of the offense, the defendant's criminal history and his relationship to the victim."

"If criminals are getting away with it," the report said, "they are getting away with it on the streets, not in the courtroom."

The research by Vera, a private, non-profit organization that engages in research into the criminal-justice system and begins its projects, was based on two samples. One was an analysis of court records for a sample of 1,888 cases out of 100,000 that were begun by arrests on felony charges, covering every major crime category in Brooklyn, Bronx, Manhattan and Queens in 1971.

The second part of the research involved a series of interviews with police officers, prosecutors, defense lawyers and judges involved in a sample of 369 arrests that reached disposition in 1973.

While acknowledging that this smaller sample—on which many of the report's conclusions are based—is not statistically valid, Vera researchers said they were satisfied that it was detailed enough to yield "ball-park" results. They also said that, while these cases were brought to court three or more years ago, recent court data indicate that the mixture of cases and the way in which they are handled remain much the same today.

In these interviews, prosecutors often mentioned prior relationships as their reasons for offering to reduce the charges and obtain light sentences in return for a guilty plea. Even more commonly, the study found, prior relationships led to dismissals. The most frequently cited reason for dismissals in such cases was the lack of cooperation by the complainants.

Case Was Not Pressed
For example, a woman tried to break up with a man. He came to her apartment and beat her up. They became reconciled and she refused to pursue the matter.

In another case, a woman complained that her sister and her sister's male friend had taken her purse and $40. Later, she said, it had all been a misunderstanding and she refused to press the case, which was then dismissed.

"At the root of much of this crime brought to court," the report concluded, "is a single, simple or complicated anger between two people who know each other. Expression of anger results in the commission of technical felonies, yet defense attorneys, judges and prosecutors recognize that in many cases conviction and prison sentences are inappropriate responses."

The study recommends that options for processing grievances among friends and lovers be explored. It points approvingly to the dispute center set up in New York City by the Institute for Mediation and Conflict Resolution that offers mediation and arbitration as alternatives to arrest and criminal-court processes.

No Adequate Alternatives
But generally, the study concluded, "our society has not found adequate alternatives to arrest and adjudication for coping with interpersonal anger publicly expressed." The congestion and "drain" on resources caused by an excessive number of such cases in the courts weakens the ability of the criminal-justice system to deal quickly and decisively with the "real" felons, who may be getting lost in the shuffle," it concluded.

The Vera study was prompted by a 1972 speech that Patrick V. Murphy, who was then the Police Commissioner, made before the Association of the Bar of the City of New York in which he noted a "criminal rise in crime" and assigned to courts the "great share of the blame for it."

To support his charge, Mr. Murphy recounted the final dispositions in 136 arrests for felonious possession of hand guns. Not one person was convicted of a felony charge, and only 53 defendants received jail sentences.

In its chapter on illegal possession of guns, the Vera report found that, as in the sample Mr. Murphy alluded to, most of the charges were either reduced or dismissed. But contrary to Mr. Murphy's suggestions that leniency by judges and callous plea bargaining by prosecutors led to the "criminal rise in crime," the report found few cases in which—when the facts of the situations and the evidentiary obstacles to felony conviction are explored—it could be said that the disposition was clearly too lenient or that the courthouse was "bargained away."

TRANSIT AUTHORITY WARNED ON PAY RISE

Financial Control Board Demands Proof of Productivity Savings Before Approving Increases

The New York State Emergency Financial Control Board warned yesterday that Transit Authority employees would be denied "cost-of-living" adjustments scheduled to take effect in Jan. 1 if the authority failed to provide proof of new savings from increased productivity.

At its regular meeting at Governor Carey's Manhattan office, the board directed the authority to produce "appropriate certification of productivity savings" by next Friday. Otherwise it will order a postponement of payment of the increase.

Stephen Berger, executive director of the Control Board, seemed to soften the effect of the board's action when he told reporters later that he and his colleagues had "no desire to withhold anything anyone has earned."

He said, "The basic information is the productivity savings have been made. But the emphasis is on the need to see firm evidence of those savings before we could recommend approval of the increase."

John G. de Ropp, senior executive officer of the Transit Authority, said he would submit the issue of an increase to a meeting of the authority's board, scheduled for next Monday, and would advise Mr. Berger after that "when we are ready to make certification."

On another matter important to the city's financial health, Thomas Appleby, the Housing and Development Administrator, reported substantial progress in arranging for the sale of Mitchell-Lama mortgages.

The city is counting on revenue from the mortgages—$2.3 billion—to help reduce the city's budget deficit in the current fiscal year.

Earlier in the year, city budget officials had said there was some doubt over whether the mortgage sales could be arranged quickly enough to raise new revenues during the fiscal year that began last July.

But Mr. Appleby said yesterday that his department expected to sell at least six mortgages for $21.3 million sometime next month. In an interview afterward, Mr. Appleby said he thought it would be feasible to raise the full $350 million before next July.

Mr. Berger said there had been no discussion at yesterday's meeting of the city's plans to achieve additional savings of $500 million in order to balance its budget in the fiscal year starting next July. City officials are committed to doing this, he said, by closing the savings which were achieved by Jan. 1.

Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation and a member of the Control Board, briefed his colleagues on the continuing effort to come up with a plan to deal with the court-ordered end to the city's year-old moratorium on payments to the holders of nearly a billion dollars in short-term notes.

A former country doctor, Patrick Hillery, was sworn in yesterday as the sixth President of the Irish Republic in a colorful ceremony at Dublin Castle. In Ireland's ancient Gaelic language, Dr. Hillery, a former Foreign Minister and Common Market commissioner, took the oath of office for a seven-year term. He succeeds Cearbhal Ó Dálaigh, who resigned last October after a political and constitutional squabble with Prime Minister Liam Cosgrave's coalition government over anti-racist legislation. Dr. Hillery, a candidate of the Fianna Fail party, said after his swearing-in, "I once wanted nothing but medicine, but when you are asked to be President of Ireland, you accept."

In the 45 years he has been in government, Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago said in a speech there, he has steadfastly withstood all temptation. "There is not one man or woman in this state or nation who has ever corrupted me," Mr. Daley said. "Many of them tried it. But you and I know that if I had ever been corrupted years ago I wouldn't still be around."

In Seattle, Bob Cummings, the former movie and television star, was sued for $100,000 by the telephone company, which contended that he used an illegal electronic device called a "blue box" to avoid paying for long distance telephone calls. The 66-year-old actor was arrested at an apartment house a year ago when the police raided the building in search of the blue box. The civil damage suit lodged by Pacific Northwest Bell charged that Mr. Cummings used the illegal device in 1974 and 1975 to make "quite a substantial number of telephone calls."

The prestigious American Academy of Arts and Letters has elected four new members, it was announced yesterday by John Hersey, the academy's secretary. They are Tennessee Williams, Elizabeth Bishop, John Updike and Howard Nemerov. Academy membership is limited to 50 artists, writers and composers. Mr. Williams joins Lillian Hellman and Arthur Miller among the dramatists. The election of the poet, Miss Bishop, brings to eight the number of women members of the academy.

In San Francisco, Gail Harris Getty sued her former husband, J. Paul Getty Jr., for his alleged failure to pay more than $160,000 into a trust fund for their four children. Mrs. Getty maintained that Mr. Getty, whose average income should be more than $5 million annually for the next few years, hasn't paid anything into the children's fund since 1967. One of the couple's children is J. Paul Getty 3d, who was kidnapped in Italy three years ago.

New York's Isabelle Gibbs Morgan, divorced wife of Jimmy Morgan, the comedian, was granted a court order directing Mr. Morgan to show why royalties due him for two books should not be attached to pay her back alimony.

President José López Portillo, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was a great help to her with his knowledge of protocol. "He told me when to stand and when to sit," said the wife of President-elect Jimmy Carter.

At Fordham University yesterday, a group of political heavyweights took some jobs at the office of the Vice Presidency. "I don't think a Vice President will ever be given a serious job by a President," said Arthur Schlesinger Jr., the historian. "It's a positively damaging office for those who hold it. A Vice President's only job is to wait around until the President dies."

Senator Birch Bayh, Democrat of Indiana, had this to say: "There is only one role for the vice President and that is presiding over the Senate. He isn't there very often, and he doesn't contribute very much when he is." Even the Senate job is one the Vice President shouldn't have, said Senator Robert P. Griffin, Republican from Michigan. "That is a useless function that is only confusing," he said. "It detracts from the likelihood that the President will give him meaningful responsibilities in the executive branch."

That inveterate yachtsman, Edward Heath, former Prime Minister of Britain, has sold his Morning Cloud, a 13-meter craft with an aluminum hull, to a Belgian yachtsman, Albert Moorhous. The yacht will be renamed the Phoenix II, as Mr. Heath retains the "Morning Cloud" name as his exclusive property. The yacht just sold replaced the Morning Cloud III, which sank in September 8, 1974 with the loss of two crewmen. Mr. Heath is having a fifth Morning Cloud built and plans to enter it in competition.

The Roman Catholic scholar Greg Baum has resigned from the ac priesthood and petitioned Pope Paul for laicization. Father Baum, an Austrian who teaches in St. Michael's College at the University of Toronto, was born of Jewish parents in Berlin years ago and was converted to Catholicism in the early 1940's. While a member of the priesthood, he was a member of the birth control laws, he said that he still totally committed to "Catholic theology and Catholic renewal."

For the fourth year in a row, members of the Elvis Presley Fan Club from Great Britain, France, the Netherlands and West Germany have made pilgrimage to the birthplace of the idol in Tupelo, Miss. About 200 of faithful this week swarmed through small frame home under the eye of Todd Slaughter, the Presley Club president. The trips to Tupelo, said Slaughter, "cut down the Elvis fan club and concentrate on having a time." He added: "Ten years ago, I was a pseudoreligious atmosphere; now you would bow down and kiss a picture of him and scream 'Oh Elvis, wouldst thou Elyas and the Queen of same time.'" jobholders and job-seekers, also a new high, the job-seekers were 8.1 percent. Alan Greenspan, chief economic adviser to President Ford, said he saw signs in the report that industrial production expanded in November after declines in September and October.

Mr. Greenspan said that he saw portents of such a rebound in the growth of 260,000 in nonfarm payroll employment, in hours worked and in average weekly earnings, which rose by 1.3 percent. This last figure, Mr. Greenspan said, pointed to the likelihood of a November gain in real earnings, after allowing for higher consumer prices, to be calculated later this month in the Consumer Price Index.

A Statistical Fluke
On the other hand, analysts at the Bureau of Labor Statistics said that the reported increase in total employment of 357,000 appeared to be exaggerated by a statistical fluke. The analysts noted that this rise included a climb of 220,000 in goafarm self-employment, a change that was too large to be plausible and that was traced to technical statistical problems.

The 8.1 percent jobless rate was the highest this year, but it was higher, at 8.3 percent, in November 1975, just before the rate began dropping to a low in May of 7.3 percent. From July through October, as the economic recovery slipped into a "pause" that Mr. Greenspan has acknowledged as longer and deeper than he had expected, the jobless rate remained at 7.8 to 7.9 percent.

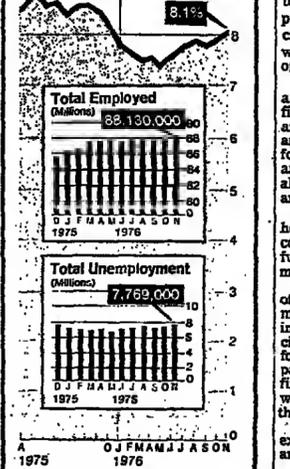

Most of the November increase in unemployment occurred among adult men, the report said. Their jobless rate edged up 0.2 of a percentage point to 6.5 percent, the third such increase in as many months. Their unemployment rate was also at its highest point of the year.

The jobless rates for adult women, teen-agers, whites and blacks showed little change. The 13.6 percent rate for blacks was almost twice the 7.4 percent for whites, as has been the case for some time. Similarly, the rate for teen-agers, black and white, was 19 percent, almost double the rate for adults.

High Rate of Job Loss
The number of persons who were unemployed because they had lost their job rose by 147,000 to 3,925,000, the highest level this year and 490,000 above the May low, the report noted. This fact appeared to be related to the higher unemployment rate for adult men, analysts said.

Also counted as unemployed are persons who quit their last jobs, persons looking for their first jobs and persons who re-entered the labor force after a period of idleness.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE U.S.

The New York Times, Dec. 4, 1976

The number of persons working part time involuntarily rose again in November to 3.6 million, up 600,000 from July. George Meany, president of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, said that taking account of involuntary part-time workers and those too discouraged to seek jobs, the "realistic" jobless total was 10.5 million for November, or 10.9 percent of the labor force.

The civilian labor force grew by a large 560,000 in November to 95.9 million, making growth for the preceding 12 months 2.9 million. That was more than a million above the expected growth, a bureau analyst said.

The bureau traced this large rise to another advance in the employment rate of adult women, which has been increasing for decades. In November, 474 of every 1,000 women of working age were in the labor force, as against 461 in November 1975.

Mr. Greenspan said that growth of the labor force, particularly the entry of women of child-bearing age, had been greater than could be explained by economic trends alone.

He acknowledged that to some extent there had been necessary job-seeking by wives or other "second workers" in families squeezed by inflation or unemployment, or both, but he insisted that the rapid growth of the labor force was also explained in part by "the cultural revolution related to women."

Financially Straitened New York Awaiting the Inauguration of Carter

By CHARLES KAISER

A lot of subway trains in New York City are still carrying those car cards that Jimmy Carter saying, "I guarantee that if I go to the White House, I'll never tell the people of the greatest city on earth to drop dead."

Those cards are a constant reminder to the city and state fiscal experts grappling with New York's newest financial crisis of an element they have never dealt with before—the impending inauguration of an avowedly sympathetic President.

For the last 18 months, there has been a more or less standard pattern to the fiscal crises of New York City. First, city and state officials turned to the banks and municipal-employee pension funds for new financial assistance. The banks and pension funds, however, have already over-committed to city securities, and suggest new Federal involvement.

Then, with bankruptcy sometimes only hours away—and everyone fearful of its consequences—the banks and pension funds agree to extend themselves one more time for the sake of the city.

In the two weeks since the State Court of Appeals voided the city's year-old moratorium on payments on $983 million in short-term notes, thereby forcing the city to come up with a repayment plan for the holders of the notes, the standard pattern has been followed. But some city financial experts are beginning to wonder whether Mr. Carter's election will change the final outcome.

Part of the uncertainty centers on just exactly what Mr. Carter's pledge means—and how far it will take the city.

Felix G. Rohatyn, chairman of the Municipal Assistance Corporation, first considered the new crisis the excuse he had been looking for to get the Federal Government involved anew in the city's affairs, only to draw back from that position on the advice of Governor Carey. The Governor suggested that the wiser political course would be to exhaust all local alternatives before turning to Washington for new aid.

Goitbaum's Position
In the meantime, Victor Goitbaum, who is executive director of District Council 37 of the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees, has been moving in the opposite direction. He now insists that he will not endorse any solution to the moratorium problem that does not include the participation of the Federal Government.

Mr. Rohatyn and Mr. Goitbaum are in agreement—that is, nearly everyone else concerned with the city's finances—that some new form of Federal aid is necessary. They disagree only about whether that aid should be sought before or after the financing for the repayment of the holders of short-term notes has been accomplished.

While most attention during the last week has been focused on the moratorium, the city is really facing two serious fiscal problems in the immediate future. The other one is an impending budget gap for the fiscal year starting next July, now projected at $500 million.

To come up with the state and Federal laws that were passed to deal with last year's crisis, the city must close that gap and balance its budget.

A spokesman for the city's banks said yesterday that they had asked to meet with budget officials next week to get a briefing on the city's progress in cutting that gap. Bank officers have so far withheld comment on all other aspects of the negotiations.

Mr. Rohatyn may try to solve the two problems at once—by fact, solving them together may be the only way he can live either one without additional Federal assistance.

The reason is this: To raise the money the city needs to pay off the holders of short-term notes, he must persuade the banks and pension funds to buy some kind of new M.A.C. or city-bond issue. But Jack Bigel, the chief consultant to the municipal-union pension trustees, has said that he sees "no possibility" of their buying any more bonds of any kind.

Conceivably, the union leaders might change their minds on this point if they knew that in return for their help with the moratorium problem, additional layoffs of municipal workers would be curtailed during the coming fiscal year.

But still another problem hanging in the background—reports of a new state deficit of $500 million or more—makes

Mr. Goitbaum skeptical of any city promises.

"The city giving us a guarantee of no layoffs means nothing," Mr. Goitbaum said. "The only way the state can make up its deficit is by taking it out of the city's hide—we don't know the parameters of the city's deficit."

In other words, an agreement among the unions, the banks, and the city, might still be worth nothing, in Mr. Goitbaum's view, if new cuts in state aid to localities forced the city into a new round of layoffs.

Richental's "Atom Bomb"
"Every group has different problems," said Mr. Rohatyn. "The banks have problems in terms of their commitments" to M.A.C. and city bonds. "The unions have problems in terms of the size of their commitments and the sacrifices their members have already made, and Richental has the problem that he's won a great victory—and he holds an atom bomb in his hand."

The reference was to Arthur Richental, the lawyer for the Flushing National Bank who brought the suit that led to the end of the moratorium. The "atom bomb" holds, in Mr. Rohatyn's view, is the threat to drive the city into bankruptcy by mandating immediate cash repayment of the $983 million the city now owes.

However, Mr. Richental's power, which is clearly limited by the Co Appeals decision, which specified the Flushing National Bank was out to demand "extraordinary measures" would be "unnecessarily disruptive of the city's delicate financial and economic affairs."

It is up to Mr. Richental to propose a proposal to the Court of Appeals, and to see how the court reacts. Mr. Richental's proposal would be to demand "extraordinary measures" to be resolved before Jan. 20. If the case, President Carter will get the chance to redeem the pledges on city subway car cards, and perhaps the what Mayor Beame and Governor Rockefeller are really gambling on.

whites at the Lafayette bar in retaliation for that earlier shooting.

Mr. Carter and Mr. Artis were released from prison earlier this year after the State Supreme Court ruled that Pasalic County law-enforcement authorities had apparently suppressed evidence favorable to the defendants in their first trial. The defendants had served nine years of their life sentences.

Both Mr. Beldock and Lewis Steel, the lawyer for Mr. Artis, addressed the fact that the defendants had not been to bed that night, having been in custody from about 3 A.M. to the time of their interviews. They had also been drinking.

"I wouldn't say that he was cockeyed," Mr. DeSimone said, referring to Mr. Artis, whom he said had obviously been sleeping. "The detective said, 'what he, he, he'—the detective entered the interrogation room where Mr. Artis had been waiting for several hours."

Chief DeSimone testified that he had advised the defendants of their rights and that both were cooperative in questioning.

Personal Investing: Fund Money Can Be Guaranteed by Insurance of the face value of an investment and are paid by the investor, along with administrative costs of 0.2 percent a year.

The insurance can be bought only for terms of 10, 15, or 20 years and can be tailored to fit either single or installment investments.

The combination of premiums, administrative costs and standard mutual fund sales charges can take a sizable chunk out of capital.

On a minimum $3,000 single payment investment insured for 10 years, for example, the total premiums paid ($180), the total administrative costs ($90) and an 8.5 percent commission ($255) would leave a stockholder with only $2,505, actually at work, not counting dividends and capital gains taken in additional shares.

In practice, only the sales commission comes off the top immediately, the insurance premiums and administrative costs are calculated on a level monthly basis over the full term of the plan and deducted from capital gains and dividend distributions.

There is a certain amount of capital shrinkage, though, which explains why only long-term investors need apply. All dividends must be plowed back into the fund, which means a sacrifice of current income.

Further, if an investor pulls his shares out of a fund before the policy term ends, he loses both the insurance and the right to any reimbursement on the premiums he has paid.

10 years or more—helps to keep the asset base on which the manager's profits depend comparatively stable.

Harleysville Mutual gets the use of the premiums for a long period in which it knows it will not have to pay off any claims.

A survey commissioned by IMF shows that the odds are about 14-to-1 against the possibility of a mutual fund's net asset value per share being lower at the end of a 10-year period than at the beginning—especially if dividends are reinvested.

The study, done by Lipper Analytical Services, covered 2,896 different 10-year periods and more than 200 funds. Only 131 of those periods or about 1 in 14 showed a loss.

History of course is not always reliable guide to the future and there has been at least one 10-year period—the one dating from Sept. 30, 1974, back—when the loss ratio would have been considerably higher.

IMF's Mr. Harris concedes that the company's sales have been "slower" than he and Mr. Sanders, a former vice president of Vance, Sanders & Company, had hoped. One reason is that "people are just not buying mutual funds and nobody buys something in the hope they will get their money back."

The IMF program has been approved for sale in 38 states. They do not include New York, where the company has not applied for licensing, or New Jersey and Connecticut, where applications to do business are pending.

Tektronix slipped 3/8 to 64 after selling as high as 65 1/2. The company, which makes oscilloscopes, reported higher quarterly net income.

Leeds & Northrup, a producer of electronic instrument control systems, climbed 1 1/2 to 28 1/2. The company said it believed that the acquisition of 13 percent of its common stock by Tyco Laboratories might have violated Federal and Pennsylvania securities laws.

Among point-plus gainers were Harris, Technicon, Northern Natural Gas, INA and Utah Power & Light. Technicon, up 1 1/2 to 40 1/2, received a $5 million order for its computer-tomographic scanners.

Tesoro Petroleum, up 1/4 to 15 1/2, predicted a "better" fiscal year in 1977. Trading volume slipped to 22.64 million shares, still a relatively high rate, from Thursday's 23.3 million shares.

Consolidated volume rose to 26.1 million shares yesterday from 23.3 million shares traded Thursday. On the American Stock Exchange, the market value index advanced 0.79 to 100.15.

The over-the-counter market also produced general price gains. The NASDAQ industrial index rose 0.43 to 94.22, while the composite index climbed 0.47 to 92.31.

In options trading on the Amex, 32,889 contracts changed hands, compared with Thursday's 42,368. On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, options volume fell to 57,803 contracts from 75,682.

Both Mr. Vorhes and Mr. Lund said there were no plans to continue the rebates, which are scheduled to end in 10 days. They will have accomplished their purpose by then, Mr. Vorhes said.

The American Motors Corporation, having trouble selling small cars, said it had a $253 price cut on the Gremlin and a rebate on the Pacer was helping...

Eugene V. Amoroso, A.M.C.'s president for marketing, said "Gremlin sales in November increased 32 percent over October. During the last 20 days of November, Pacer sales increased 61 percent over the October period before rebates."

However, overall A.M.C. sales for period were down 12.8 percent from year and they were off 24.4 percent the full month. The Chrysler Corporation reported a percent increase in sales for the third of the month and 9 percent for November.

Chrysler Highest Since 1965 R.K. Brown, executive vice president for North American automotive sales for the company, said sales of cars carrying the Chrysler name were the highest for a November since 1968, totaling 23,536.

Sales of the Volare and Aspen, 33 percent ahead of Chrysler's cars a year ago, when it was selling Valiant and Dart. However, the company has had to cut back Aspen-Volare production in recent weeks because of inventory problems.

"Industry compact sales are not as we expected them to be but this month should improve as we get further into the model year," Mr. Brown said. Import sales were up 30 percent in month and foreign cars accounted for 14.2 percent of the United States market against 11.8 percent a year ago.

Volkswagen, the West German giant that has been in a sales slump for a year, reported a 17.5 percent increase in sales in October over a year ago. "Happy days are here again," said one company executive who added "November sales were up 33 percent in October."

With import sales of 119,000 last month and domestic sales of 720,772, total sales were 839,772, compared with 742,979 a year earlier, when domestic sales were 654,979 and imports 88,000. Following are sales reported by the domestic companies:

S.E.C. SETTLES CHARGES OF INSURANCE DIVERSION. Special to The New York Times. WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—The Securities and Exchange Commission announced today a settlement of charges it brought in September that the National American Life Insurance Company and several other companies and individuals had engaged in a complex scheme to misappropriate more than $3 million of corporate assets.

ance premiums diverted from the Teamsters Union health and welfare funds. Richard G. Kleindienst, former Attorney General, split a $250,000 fee with another Washington lawyer for his influence in placating the Teamster money with those who allegedly diverted it, but he was not a defendant in the case. Federal District Judge Charles Richey approved a permanent injunction under which a receiver is appointed for National American, a Louisiana company, and the defendants are enjoined from violations of securities laws.

Corporation Affairs

Monsanto Unit to Close Alabama Polyester Plant

The Monsanto Company of St. Louis announced yesterday plans to close next month the polyester plant of its wholly owned Olympia Industries subsidiary in Tuscaloosa, Ala.

Monsanto said that because of industry over-capacity in polyester texturing and because of reduced demand for polyester yarns, the plant has been operating at a substantial loss for two years. Noting that it would be difficult to make the plant profitable in the foreseeable future, the company said that the price loss for the plant this year would be about $8 million.

Digital Equipment Plant in France Is Turned Down

Plans of the Digital Equipment Corporation of Maynard, Mass., to build a plant in France have been vetoed by the French Government, according to an announcement by Government officials in Paris. The plant, which would have employed about 1,000 persons, is to be built at Antecy-le-Vieux in the Haute Savoie Department, an economically depressed area.

Rock Island Borrowing Confirmed by Court

A United States Court of Appeals in St. Louis affirmed a lower court decision allowing the bankrupt Rock Island Lines railroad to borrow $17.5 million and to use new diesel locomotives. The decision, which upheld a ruling last Jan. by Federal District Court Judge Frank J. McGarr, was a setback for financier Henry Crown and other Rock Island creditors who have tried to block further borrowing by the line. Judge McGarr, who is presiding over the railroad's reorganization under the bankruptcy law, had ruled that the road might borrow $17.5 million and also lease 56 new locomotives. The Federal Government would guarantee the borrowing. Opponents of the borrowing contend that the line has not proved that it can be successfully reorganized and maintain that it should pay off its current debts.

Ideal Toy Studies Rebates

The Ideal Toy Corporation said an investigation was under way into the possibility that improper rebates were received from an ocean carrier. The investigation was started at the behest of the audit committee of the company's board of directors.

Fiat Leads Rally On Milan Stock Market

For the second day, shares of the Fiat group led a rally yesterday on the Milan stock market, which had been sparked by the announcement on Wednesday of the agreement under which the Government of Libya is acquiring an interest of nearly 10 percent in the Italian automotive company. A 4 percent gain by Fiat yesterday brought its rise to about 25 percent for two days. Fiat's closing price yesterday was the equivalent of $2.45 a share.

The active demand on the Milan exchange carried over to other issues yesterday, with Montedison, Pirelli, Bastogi and Immobiliare Roma prominent among leaders.

Writ Enjoins Commonwealth Aides

The Securities and Exchange Commission announced that it had obtained a permanent injunction in a Tallahassee, Fla., Federal District Court forbidding nine former officers and directors of the Commonwealth Corporation and its accounting firm from violating antifraud provisions of the Federal securities law.

The Tallahassee-based mortgage banking concern, which found itself holding a large number of loans when the Florida real estate boom of the early 1970's ended in 1974, filed a bankruptcy petition in June 1974 and is operating under a receiver. The S.E.C. complaint, which the defendants have neither admitted nor denied, al-

U.S. Banks Lead Lebanon Return; National of Chicago Opens Monday

LONDON, Dec. 3 (Reuters)—Big American banks are leading a return to Lebanon the international banking community, hopes rise of permanent peace after 19 months of civil war, bankers have decided it is safe to back Beirut, set up business again and count the money. The United States, with branches in devastated oil-line areas believe looters robbed and their clients of at least $500 million, mostly in cash, bonds and jewelry.

Lebanon, once the financial hub of the Middle East, moved out in 1975, although a few maintained an emergency presence. They switched operations to London, Paris, Athens, Cairo and the emerging offshore banking centers in the Arab world such as Bahrain. The British Bank of the Middle East is among those hoping to re-establish its Beirut headquarters in the next few weeks, in addition to a small branch outside the city that managed to stay in business.

Dollar Drops Slightly On European Markets; Gold Prices Are Mixed

BRUSSELS, Dec. 3 (UPI)—The dollar slipped slightly lower yesterday on all European money markets except Paris. In London, where it gained marginally against the pound. The price of gold was mixed, closing about where it was last Friday. Gold was down in Zurich to $130.125 an ounce from yesterday's $130.875 and up to $131.125 from $130.875 in London.

Monsanto's OFF MORE EXECUTION

The application for a Supreme Court review of Mr. Gilmore's sentence was filed yesterday by attorneys representing Mr. Gilmore's wife, Bessie Gilmore of Milwaukee.

It stated, however, that three of the nine Justices would have denied the stay. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice John Paul Stevens.

Mr. Gilmore's plea to the Court, filed yesterday, contended that her son had not made a valid waiver. It contended, also, that the Utah Supreme Court had not made a sufficient effort to determine if the waiver was valid.

The Supreme Court's order today said that the state of Utah's application for a stay should be denied. The court's ruling was in effect pending both the state's filing of its response and "further proceedings in the Court" on Mrs. Gilmore's application.

Utah Law Is Overridden SALT LAKE CITY, Dec. 3—The Supreme Court's action in the Gilmore case serves to override a Utah law requiring that execution take place within 30 to 60 days after sentence is imposed.

Robert Hansen, the state's Attorney General-elect, said this afternoon that he would begin immediately to question the Supreme Court's decision. He said, the status of Dennis Boaz, the attorney dismissed by Mr. Gilmore who also took the role of author and agent for the murderer's life story.

Weather Reports and Forecast

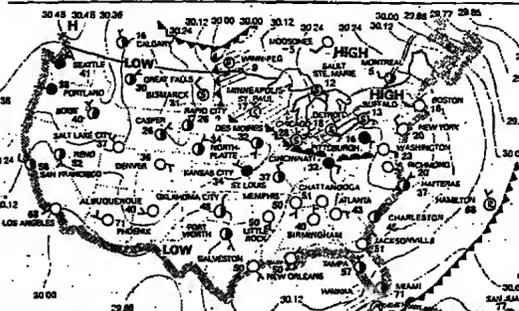

Summary

Snow may develop today from northern New England through the lake region into the central Appalachians. Other areas of snow are forecast for the Northern Plains States, central Rockies and northwestern Texas; additional precipitation will be limited to rain along the coast of the Carolinas. Sunny or partly sunny weather will prevail elsewhere. Mild temperatures will be limited to California. It will be generally cold throughout the country, although relatively warmer conditions will prevail from the Middle Atlantic States into Ohio and Michigan; colder weather will move into the Plains States.

Skies were clear yesterday across most of the country. Light snow continued however, from extreme western New York across the lake region into the eastern Dakotas and parts of the upper and middle Mississippi Valley. Scattered areas of clouds dotted the Rockies, while fog covered the Pacific Northwest. It was very cold in the Northeast; mild temperatures were limited to southern California, although warmer weather occurred from the Gulf States into the Plains States; it was cool or cold elsewhere.

Ex-Policeman Shoots Gunman in a Holdup

With a bandit's shotgun pointed at his head, a 41-year-old former policeman feigned compliance with an order to remove his pants, and drew a revolver from an ankle holster and shot the gunman twice in the head early yesterday during a holdup in a Bronx bar.

with shotguns and two with pistols—invaded the bar just before 1 o'clock and ordered all of the patrons to the rear, where they were told to lie on the floor while money and valuables were taken from them.

FREE MARRIAGE MANUAL ILLUSTRATED

Avant-Garde Media, Inc., publishers of such elegant, controversial, utilitarian and bewitching periodicals as Moneysworth, Avant-Garde and—especially—the late lamented art quarterly EROS, is pleased to announce the most generous magazine subscription offer in history:

If you will order a one-year subscription to Moneysworth, the wallet-fattening fortnightly that tells you how to get the most for your money (and the most out of life), we will send you—ABSOLUTELY FREE—a copy of the magnificent, thrilling, authoritative reference work Ecstasy: An Illustrated Marriage Manual, by Martin Shepard, M.D.

Ecstasy is profusely illustrated with pictures of couples demonstrating the various positions and postures of sexual intercourse. But the pictures are not pornographic. They are intended solely for educational purposes. They are not being offered to the thrillseeker; on the contrary, we will not knowingly send a copy of Ecstasy to anyone who indicates a desire for pornography (nor to anyone under 21). Our purpose in disseminating this work—free—is to help educate the American public on a subject about which it is abysmally ignorant: how to maximize sexual pleasure and fully appreciate the importance of a happy sex life to every other aspect of daily living.

For this reason, we have commissioned as author of Ecstasy one of the nation's most renowned figures in the field of sex education, Martin Shepard, M.D. Dr. Shepard is a pioneering psychiatrist, revered clinician, sought-after lecturer, and author of a dozen best-selling works on interpersonal relations. He has been Consulting Psychiatrist to The New York State Family Court, Attending Psychiatrist at Mt. Sinai Hospital, Psychiatric Consultant to The New York City Board of Education and Department of Correction, and Director of Anthos, the venerated New York City psychological growth center. No man is better qualified to have written this book.

To Ecstasy, Dr. Shepard brings a profound humanity, vast clinical experience and keen understanding of the psychodynamics of sexual behavior. He has poured all of his considerable experience and wisdom into writing this book and, in the process, has created a classic.

In addition to the information and advice conveyed by its pictures, Ecstasy will answer such questions as:

- Can an extramarital affair ever help to keep a marriage going?
- What is the effect of marijuana on sexual pleasure?
- What is a "maxi" orgasm?
- Is there really such a thing as a nymphomaniac?
- What is the effect of powerful sexual excitement on the heart?
- How do homosexuals make love?
- How can overweight be turned to advantage in bed?

Cyrus R. Vance often served as an international troubleshooter for the late President Lyndon B. Johnson. Here he confers with the President in 1968 after mission to investigate the North Korean seizure of the Pueblo.

A Skilled and Realistic Negotiator

Cyrus Roberts Vance

By LESLIE H. GELB
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3 — It seemed inevitable to the foreign policy world that President-elect Carter would select Cyrus Roberts Vance to be his Secretary of State. Among those who were consulted; everyone respected him and no one opposed him. What Mr. Carter and his aides heard about the tall, slender man when they telephoned around the country was that he was solid, a healer, a liberal Democrat who strongly favored detente with the Soviet Union, a skilled negotiator who used no gimmicks, cautious and realistic, a realist who worked with a consensus but who had a sense of moral idealism.

A former Deputy Secretary of Defense and diplomatic troubleshooter in the Johnson Administration, Mr. Vance, 59, is 59 years old, was seen as an assuring figure to the world and an able to get along with a Congress that has a greater role in foreign policy. As he is called by friends, was in to Clarkburg, W. Va., on March 19, 1917. His father, John Vance, who died five years later, was a close friend of John W. Davis, the unsuccessful Democratic candidate for President in 1924. Mr. Davis took young Cyrus under his wing, and friends say, nursed in him an interest in the law and a lawyer's approach to problems.

Mr. Vance's one who served with him in the State Department in the 1960's recalled: "Cy is a theorist; he took the problems and by one as they came up and solved them. He saved me $65,000 in a matter of a few days."

Mr. Vance's worth is a political asset to the President.

Mr. Bundy specifically recalled their playing together on the hockey team. "Cy was not a gifted hockey player, but he worked hard and became a first-stringer."

After majoring in economics at Yale, he graduated from Yale Law School in 1942 and then served on destroyers in the Navy during World War II. In 1947, he joined the New York City law firm of Simpson, Thatcher and Bartlett, and today is a partner in the renamed firm of Simpson and Thatcher.

Mr. Vance was lured to Washington in 1957 to help organize an investigation by the Senate preparedness subcommittee into military and space programs. It was there that he met Senator Lyndon B. Johnson, his entry into the Kennedy Administration.

He started as general counsel to the Pentagon in 1961, then became Secretary of the Army, then Deputy Secretary of Defense. In the Pentagon, he developed a reputation as a good manager, an implementer of policy, a man able to get on with the military men on Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara's relations with the military began to sour, and an incredibly loyal alter-ego to Mr. McNamara.

Urged That Bombing Be Stopped

He was known during these years to be a supporter, but not an advocate of the Vietnam War. In March 1968, President Johnson gathered a group of so-called "wise men" to assess the future course of the war. Mr. Vance was among those who told the President that he had to stop the bombing of North Vietnam and begin the negotiations process.

In return for that advice, Mr. Johnson asked Mr. Vance to become the No. 2 negotiator to former Gov. W. Averell Harriman to the Paris negotiations. It was not the first time Mr. Johnson had asked him to come back as a troubleshooter after he left the Pentagon for health reasons in 1967.

He served as the President's personal observer in the Detroit riots in the summer of 1967, and later that year served as the envoy to Greece and Turkey in their dispute over Cyprus.

No Books and Articles

Unlike many of his colleagues who left government, Mr. Vance did not write books and articles. His views on policy matters were learned mainly from those who worked with him at the United Nations Association and the Council on Foreign Relations.

All described his views as mainstream liberal Democratic: making an effort to get along with Russia, reduction of strategic nuclear armaments and conventional arms sales, being forthcoming to the developing nations in their demands for reform of the international economic system, a balanced position on Arab-Israeli issues.

Some of those who worked with him in the past consider him too much of a consensus man, waiting for positions and pressures to develop before taking a stand. Others say he has been more vigorous in stating his views in the last year. Still others, like Mr. Bundy, maintain that "he doesn't jump in right away but comes in before the outcome is clear, particularly on an issue with moral aspects."

Some maintained that Mr. Vance is not imaginative, but even many of these associates argued that the real need was in American foreign policy was less imagination than integrity, steadiness, quiet perseverance and a willingness for self-sacrifice.

As one who has known him for a long time put it, "Cy doesn't say anything different publicly than he says privately."

Mr. Vance is a member of the board of directors of L.B.M., Pan American World Airways and The New York Times and also is a trustee at Yale University and of the Rockefeller Foundation. He is married to the former Grace Sloane and they have five children. For relaxation, he reads and plays tennis.

REACTION ON VANCE IS POSITIVE ABROAD

In Western Europe and Japan Officials See the Appointment as Sign of Policy Stability

By FLORA LEWIS
Special to The New York Times

PARIS, Dec. 3—The first European reaction to the designation of Cyrus R. Vance to be Secretary of State in the Carter administration was one of warm satisfaction. Word reached here after offices were closed, but officials available for comment expressed considerable relief to hear that they would be dealing with a man they knew who had a solid background in European affairs.

Heads of government of the European Economic Community, who will meet in the Hague next week, had made it clear that they felt they could not decide urgent pending issues until they knew something about the attitudes of the next administration.

The selection of Mr. Vance was taken not only as a sign that American foreign policy would remain fundamentally unchanged but also as an extremely encouraging indication that Washington would be able to move quickly on substantive issues after Jimmy Carter is inaugurated.

In Bonn the Government spokesman, Klaus Böhling, in a prepared statement on Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's views, said he "enthusiastically welcomed Mr. Vance whom he knows as an especially well-qualified foreign policy expert and for whom he has a high regard."

A Big Question in Rome

In Rome the big question was Mr. Vance's past involvement in the Communist Party in Western Europe. Communist parties. The leftist newspaper Paese Sera termed him a dove—in the context a form of praise.

Western European Communism is also a key issue in Madrid, where the liberalizing faction felt that Mr. Vance might be more flexible than Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger, who they believed had issued a firm veto of a legal case for the Communists in Spanish politics.

Mr. Vance, who engaged in subtle diplomacy himself a decade ago and successfully headed off a threatened Turkish invasion of Cyprus, was especially welcomed in Athens. Speaking privately, a high official said Mr. Vance seemed to care about Greece and its region while Mr. Kissinger did not.

Senator Jacob K. Javits, who was on a flying trip to Europe to confer with principal leaders, said he was thrilled with the nomination. "It is very gratifying to the United States and very reassuring to the world," he added, saying Mr. Vance was "a man of great skill and experience, and is devoted to a bipartisan foreign policy and a suitable international role for the United States."

British Appear Delighted

LONDON, Dec. 3—The British are clearly delighted with the selection of Cyrus R. Vance—publicly because he knows them and they know him; privately because they expect that he will take a thoughtful and sympathetic approach to Britain's needs.

Mr. Vance has credentials that appeal to foreign policy officials here. The Foreign Secretary, Anthony Crosland, does not know him from the old days but arranged a meeting while he was in New York in October.

Tokyo Sees Welcome Choice

TOKYO, Saturday, Dec. 4—A high Japanese Government spokesman said this morning that the designation of Cyrus R. Vance to be Secretary of State was a welcome choice of a man quite experienced in foreign affairs.

"We feel Mr. Vance's world thinking is well-balanced," the spokesman added.

Allan Sends Congratulations

JERUSALEM, Dec. 3—The Israeli Foreign Minister, Yigal Allon, sent a message of congratulations to Cyrus R. Vance, Mr. Allon's office said tonight.

South Koreans Are Pleased

SEOUL, South Korea, Dec. 4—South Korean officials have welcomed the appointment of Cyrus R. Vance as Secretary of State. Foreign Minister Park Chung-hee said that Mr. Vance was their best man with the Georgia Legislature.

Reassured by Experience

It is against the backdrop of Mr. Carter's own relative newness to the field of foreign affairs that many here regarded Mr. Vance's extensive experience with the Johnson Administration as reassuring to such diverse diplomatic partners as the British, Israelis and Russians, all of whom apparently let Mr. Carter know through private channels that they thought highly of Mr. Vance.

The tall, slightly graying lawyer has gained a reputation not only for calming troubled relations with allies during diplomatic missions to Cyprus and Korea in the late 1960's, but also for effective negotiations with the North Vietnamese in Paris in 1968 and in leading private delegations to Moscow to talk about arms control and other means of easing East-West tensions.

But for all his campaign talks about seeking out Cabinet Secretaries who would be strong, independent policymakers, the President-elect has deliberately avoided choosing a forceful strategist like John Foster Dulles or Dean Acheson or a flamboyant diplomat-thinker like Mr. Kissinger.

More in Rusk-Herter Mold

In Mr. Vance, he has chosen someone more in the mold of Dean Rusk in the Kennedy Administration or Christian A. Herter at the end of the Eisenhower Administrations. The professional diplomats who know Mr. Vance expect him to run

Lance Says He'll Sell Bank Stock To Avoid Any Conflict of Interest

By NICHOLAS M. HORROCK
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Dec. 3—Bert Lance, President-elect Jimmy Carter's nominee for director of the Office of Management and Budget, said today that he would sell his $3.5 million interest in the National Bank of Georgia to avoid a conflict of interest with his duties in the Carter administration.

Mr. Carter announced Mr. Lance's plans to divest himself of the holdings at a news conference in Plains, Ga., where he formally announced the nomination of Mr. Lance and Cyrus R. Vance to Cabinet-level posts in his administration.

Earlier today, in a wide-ranging interview, Mr. Lance said he planned to sell his bank stock through private placement to preclude its sale's causing economic repercussions in Georgia.

He estimated his holdings in the bank, the fifth largest in Georgia, at $3.5 million, but he remarked "I owe a lot of money" stemming from his purchase of controlling interest in the bank two years ago. He said he expected the sale would "settle out this debt." Mr. Lance and two associates had pooled $7.4 million to gain control of the bank.

Sees "Lynch Psychology"

Mr. Lance reacted angrily to a suggestion that there was a conflict of interest in his bank's $3.9 million line of credit to the Carter family's peanut business.

"That is the sort of thing that irritates me," he said, adding that he believed it stemmed from a "lynch psychology" that "must come to an end."

He said one person had asked him if he did not think the loan was similar to buying an ambassadorship.

"If I could have predicted two years ago that Jimmy Carter would be President, I guess that would be a pretty valuable skill," he said.

Moreover, Mr. Lance said, to accept the appointment to the budget office he was not only divesting himself of his bank holdings but he was also taking a $70,000-to-$80,000-a-year cut in salary. The director of the office receives $46,800 a year.

Mr. Lance said that while Mr. Carter was still Governor "I told him that I wanted to be his banker." He said that he had personally approved the loan to the Carter Warehouse Company and defended it as an excellent investment.

Independent banking sources in Atlanta confirmed this view. They said the National Bank of Georgia under Mr. Lance's leadership had been the only one of the "big five" Atlanta banks to invest heavily in agriculture and that, unless credit information about the Carter operation disclosed weaknesses, the loan appeared to be good.

Mr. Lance and several other bank officials said that the Carter family could probably have obtained the loan from other institutions.

Mr. Lance owns a home in Atlanta valued in newspaper articles at $700,000 and a 400-acre farm in Calhoun where he raises Black Angus cattle.

He said that he and his wife had already found a house in Washington's Georgetown area and his wife was about to make the final decision on whether to buy it.

Mr. Lance is married to the former LeBelle David, a cousin of Calhoun, and they have four sons. He said he did not expect his children, who range in age from 15 to 24 years, to accompany him to Washington.

Sees No Difficulties

He said he expected no difficulties from either the Federal Bureau of Investigation inquiry into his background or the confirmation hearings before the Senate. A survey of knowledgeable banking, legal and political sources in Atlanta indicated that there was no significant criticism of either his integrity or his business ability that might arise.

When Mr. Lance made his financial disclosure in 1973 it was disclosed that he put over $200,000 of his own money into his primary race and had received $300,000 in bank loans without collateral. Although this practice was not illegal, his opponents dubbed him "Loophole Lance."

Political observers in Atlanta said that adverse publicity from this was one reason he was defeated by Mr. Busbee. The most galling blow came after the election when it was disclosed that Governor Busbee had also financed his campaign through bank loans.

Mr. Lance, a strapping 6-foot 4-inch-tall son of a college president, is known for being candid and outspoken. Once when Mr. Carter was reorganizing the state government, his staff and cabinet were grumbling that he never seemed to give any credit for their hours of overtime, and extra effort. It was Mr. Lance, as spokesman for the others, who went to Governor Carter and reminded him to "say thank you once in a while."

Mr. Lance said he always tried to answer his own telephone in both the banking business and state government and refused to let his secretary "screen" his calls to weed out unpleasant criticism,

Director of Transportation and as an advisor on Georgia state government.

Mr. Carter said that he had "almost unanimous" recommendations from those in this country, and to those in foreign countries, that Mr. Vance named Secretary of State. [Opening remarks by Mr. Vance, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger hailed the Vance appointment as "an outstanding choice."

Mr. Vance was "exceptionally well-qualified for his own responsibility" and that he had ordered that all his other information available to him be also "made available immediately to Mr. Vance."

Support and Prayers Urged

Mr. Vance deserves the support and prayers of all Americans for peace, progress and prosperity of the United States—which will so much depend on the realization of a world for all mankind," Mr. Kissinger said in a statement.

Mr. Vance and Mr. Kissinger were scheduled to meet at the State Department Monday afternoon. The meeting was set up when Mr. Kissinger called Vance immediately after the official announcement of Mr. Vance's appointment was made.

In the news conference, Mr. Carter said that he was pleased to have Mr. Vance and his assistants on hand for the news conference. Mr. Carter said that they had had no word from Mr. Ford or his assistants about the news conference, but that Mr. Carter was sure to be with them.

The more common practice, said the investigator, was the direct sale to the salesman of the retailer. Mr. Roth and Federal investigators knew of no instances where a particular product was offered as an inducement to purchase.

While the threat of S.E.C. action against publicly owned wholesalers precipitated such disclosures, there was no indication that large retail chains, such as hotels and restaurants, said Mr. Roth, were being investigated.

Mr. Roth also said that his agency was investigating "payments to the Schaefer Brewing Company, disclosed by the company in a filing with the State Liquor Authority last month. The company said that the payments had been discontinued."

Yields on State Mining Rules

ENNE, Wyo., Dec. 3 (AP)—In a move hailed by Interior Secretary S. Kleppe as a states' rights victory, the Federal Government yesterday agreed to give precedence to federal lands over coal mining standards.

The agreement, reached after a joint news conference with Gov. Edwin Edwards, Mr. Kleppe said, was a model for other coal-producing states in the Rocky Mountain region.

State Processing First

As familiar with the negotiations as the state and the Department of the Interior, Mr. Kleppe said, the agreement had been reached in spite of opposition from middle-level Federal officials and Mr. Kleppe had personally intervened in favor of the settlement.

The agreement ends a dispute that led State District Court suit filed in June to challenge the constitutionality of new Interior Department rules that the Federal Government would override state law in some cases, or the stipulation and consent of the Interior Department agreed that coal leases must comply with laws and regulations regarding mining, regardless of what action the Department of Interior has taken in approving the lessee's mining plan.

Mr. Kleppe and Mr. Herschler said that all Federal coal mining permits would first be processed by the state and would then be submitted to the Interior Secretary for his approval.

"It was my conclusion as Secretary that all doubts should be resolved in favor of the state," Mr. Kleppe said.

"Under the agreement, governmental red tape and duplication will be minimized, and the primary responsibility of the state for administration and enforcement of reclamation laws will be emphasized."

Duplicate security bonds, applications and enforcement actions will be eliminated under the agreement, Mr. Kleppe and Mr. Herschler said.

Mr. Kleppe said that the Interior Department was ready to negotiate settlements with any other states with reclamation laws as stringent as or more stringent than Wyoming's.

Sources familiar with the negotiations said that several middle level officials in the Bureau of Land Management and the Department of the Interior had opposed the provisions of the negotiated settlement, prompting Mr. Kleppe to direct his subordinates to work towards a negotiated settlement.
